 That draw the litter of close curtain'd sleep.
 Here modest matrons in soft litters driv'n,
 In solemn pomp appear. Milton.
Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
 And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
 The promisd dote. Dryden's Æn.
 2. The straw laid under animals, or on plants.
 To crouch in litter of your stable planks. Shakespeare.
 Take off the litter from your kernel beds.
 Their litter is not tols'd by fows unclean. Boyle.
 3. A brood of young.

LIT

I do here walk before thee like a fow that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Reflect upon that numerous litter of strange, senseless opinions, that crawl about the world. South's Sermon.
A wolf came to a fow, and very kindly offered to take care of her litter. L'Estrange's Fables.

Full many a year his hateful head had been
For tribute paid, nor since in Cambria seen:
The last of all the litter 'scap'd by chance,
And from Geneva first infest'd France. Dryden.

Any number of things thrown fluttishly about.
Strophon, who found the room was void,
Stole in, and took a strict survey
Of all the litter as it lay. Swift.

A birth of animals.
Fruitful as the fow that carry'd
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden.
To LITTER, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To bring forth; used of beasts, or of human beings in abhorrence or contempt.

Then was this island,
Save for the son that the did litter here,
A freckled whelp, hag-born, not honour'd with A human shape. Shakespeare's Tempest.

My father named me Auctolicus, being littered under Mercury, who, as I am, was likewise a snapper up of unconsidered trifles. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
The whelps of bears are, at first littering, without all form or fashion. Haleswell on Providence.

We might conceive that dogs were created blind, because we observe they were littered to with us. Brown.
2. To cover with things negligently, or fluttishly scattered about.

The room with volumes litter'd round. Swift.
3. To cover with straw.
He found a stall where oxen stood,
But for his ease well litter'd was the floor. Dryden.

To supply cattle with bedding.
LITTER, adj. [comp. lits, superlat. leasts, Gothic; lytel, Saxon.]
1. Small in quantity.

The coast of Dan went out too little for them. Jesh. xix.
2. Not great; small; diminutive; or of small bulk.
He fought to see Jesus, but could not for the press, because he was little of stature. Luke xix. 3.

His son, being then very little, I considered only as wax, to be moulded as one pleases. Locke.
3. Of small dignity, power, or importance.

When thou wast little in thine own fight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes. 1 Sam. xv. 17.
All that is past ought to seem little to thee, because it is so in itself. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Not much; not many.
I leave him to reconcile these contradictions, which may plentifully be found in him, by any one who will but read with a little attention. Locke.

LITTLE, n. f.
1. A small space.
Much was in little writ; and all convey'd
With cautious care, for fear to be betray'd. Dryden.

2. A small part; a small proportion.
He that despiseth little things, shall perish by little and little. Ecclus. i.

The poor remnant of human seed which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon's New Atlantis.

By freeing the precipitated matter from the rest by filtration, and diligently grinding the white precipitate with water, the mercury will little by little be gathered into drops. Boyle.

I gave thee thy master's house, and the house of Israel and Judah; and if that had been too little, I would have given such and such things. 2 Sam. xii. 8.

They have much of the poetry of Meccenas, but little of his liberality. Dryden's Preface to All for Love.

Nor grudge I thee the much that Grecians give,
Nor murr'ring take the little I receive. Dryden's Homer.
There are many expressions, which carrying with them no clear ideas, are like to remove but little of my ignorance. Locke.

3. A slight affair.
As if 'twere little from their town to chafe,
I through the seas pursued their exil'd race. Dryden's Æn.
I view with anger and disdain,
How little gives thee joy or pain:
A print, a bronze, a flow'r, a root. Prior.

Not much.
These they are fitted for, and little else. Cheyne.
LITTLE, adv.

LIV

1. In a small degree.
The received definition of names should be changed as little as possible. Watts's Logic.

2. In a small quantity.
3. In some degree, but not great.
Where there is too great a thinness in the fluids, subacid substances are proper, though they are a little astrigent. Arbutnot on Ailments.

4. Not much.
The tongue of the just is as choice silver; the heart of the wicked is little worth. Prov. x. 20.
Finding him little studious, she chose rather to endue him with conversative qualities of youth; as, dancing and fencing. Wotton.

That poem was infamously bad; this parallel is little better.
Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons were very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.

LITTLENESS, n. f. [from little.]
1. Smallness of bulk.

All trying, by a love of littleness,
To make abridgments, and to draw to less;
Even that nothing which at first we were. Donne.

We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthy particles, so as many of them might float in the air. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Meanness; want of grandeur.
The English and French, in verse, are forced to raise their language with metaphors, by the pomposity of the whole phrase, to wear off any littleness that appears in the particular parts. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. Want of dignity.
The angelick grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our littleness so much, as if it was always displayed. Collier of Emsy.

LITTORAL, v. a. [littoris, Latin.] Belonging to the shore.
LITURGY, n. f. [liturgia; liturgie, Fr.] Form of prayers; formulary of public devotions.

We dare not admit any such form of liturgy, as either appointeth no scripture at all, or very little to be read in the church. Hosker, b. v.

The blesseddest of mortal wights began to be importuned, so that a great part of divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Hoswell.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.
To LIVE, v. n. [lypan, lypagan, Saxon.]

1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.
She shall be
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living day should kiss it? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To save the living, and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led. Dryden.
2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits; good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest. Ecclus. xli. 1.
Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjuncture of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not fully lived and died in. Hammond.

A late prelate, of a remarkable zeal for the church, were religions to be tried by lives, would have lived down the pope, and the whole confistory. Atterbury.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 162.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakespeare.

See the minutes how they run;
How many makes the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year, Shakespeare.
How many years will finish up the life,
The way to live long must be, to use our bodies so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance. Ray on Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.
What greater curse could envious fortune give,
Than just to die when I began to live. Dryden.

5. To

LIV

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.
My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.
He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. 1 Thes. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed.
It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way. Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost.
Mens evil manners live in bras, their virtues
We write in water. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace.
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit.
The shepherd ivanias shall dance and sing,
For thy delight each May morning.
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me, and be my love. Shakespeare.

9. To feed.
Those animals that live upon other animals have their flesh more alkalescent than those that live upon vegetables. Arbut.

10. To maintain one's self.
A most notorious thief, lived all his life-time of spoils and robberies. Spenser.

They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.
His treasure and goods were all seized upon, and a small portion thereof appointed for his poor wife to live upon. Kneller's Hyst. of the Turks.

The number of soldiers can never be great in proportion to that of people, no more than the number of those that are idle in a country, to that of those who live by labour. Temple.

He had been most of his time in good service, and had something to live on now he was old. Temple.

11. To be in a state of motion or vegetation.
In a spacious cave of living stone,
The tyrant Æolus, from his airy throne,
With pow'r imperial curbs the struggling winds. Dryden.

Cool groves and living lakes
Give after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden.

12. To be unextinguished.
Pure oil and incense on the fire they throw:
These gifts the greedy flames to dust devour,
Then on the living coals red wine they pour. Dryden.

LIVE, adj. [from alive.]
1. Quick; not dead.
If one man's ox hurt another that he die, they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money. Exod. xxi. 35.

2. Active; not extinguished.
A louder sound was produced by the impetuous eruptions of the halitious flames of the salpêtre upon casting of a live coal upon it. Boyle.

LIVELESS, adv. [from live.] Wanting life; rather lifeless.
Description cannot suit itself in words,
To demonstrate the life of such a battle,
In life so lively as it shews itself. Shakes. Henry V.

LIVELINESS, n. f. [It appears to me corrupted from liveliness.] Support of life; maintenance; means of living.
Ah! luckless babe! born under cruel stars,
And in dead parents' baleful ashes bred;
Full little wenchest thou what sorrows are,
Left thee for portion of thy liveliness. Fairy Queen.

That rebellion drove the lady thence, to find a liveliness out of her own estate. Clarendon, b. viii.
He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a liveliness in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and liveliness to get their living by those practices, for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South's Sermons.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a liveliness where they can find it. Addison's Spectator.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest liveliness: the skilful or industrious find their account in it. Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 42.

LIVELINESS, n. f. [from lively.]
1. Appearance of life.
That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear,

LIV

pear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden's Dryfref.
2. Vivacity; sprightliness.
Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and so make able and great men; but tame and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke on Education.

LIVELINESS, n. f. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.
She gave like blessing to each creature,
As well of worldly livelode as of life,
That there might be no difference nor strife. Hubberd.

LIVELONG, adj. [live and long.] Tedious; long in passing.
Many a time, and oft,
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Your infants in your arms; and there have fate
The livelong day, with patient expectation
To see great Pompey pass. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

The obscur'd bird clamour'd the livelong night. Shakespeare.
Young and old come forth to play,
On a sun-shine holiday.
Till the livelong day-light fail. Milton.

Seek for pleasure to destroy
The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.
How could the fit the livelong day,
Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

3. Lasting; durable.
Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a livelong monument. Milton.

LIVELY, adj. [live and like.]
1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.
But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste,
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton's Ag.

2. Gay; airy.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.
Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden's Dryfref.

4. Strong; energetic.
His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South's Sermons.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense and lively, than those of natural bodies. Newton's Opticks.
Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury's Sermons.

1. Briskly; vigorously.
They brought their men to the slough, who discharging Lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.
That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden's Pref. to his State of Innocence.

LIVER, n. f. [from live.]
1. One who lives.
Be thy affections undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness or misery.
The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world. Hammond's Fund.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own, the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.

Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented. Atterbury.

3. [From lyrene, Saxon.] One of the entrails.
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakespeare.

Reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lustiness dejected. Shakespeare.

LIVERCOLOUR, adj. [liver and colour.] Dark red.
The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour. Woodward.

LIVERGROWN, adj. [liver and grown.] Having a great liver.
Inquired what other casualties was most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest. Grant.

LIVERWORT, n. f. [liver and wort.] A plant.
That sort of liverwort which is used to cure the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is shot, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads spreads on the surface of the ground, and, when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour.

LIVERY. n. f. [from livrer, French.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.

You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His livery, and deny his offered homage.

2. Release from wardship.

Had the two houses first sued out their livery, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tutels, I should then suspect my own judgment. K. Charles.

2. The writ by which possession is obtained.

3. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What livery is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at livery; the which word, I guess, is derived of livring or delivering forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the livery is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink: and livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word livery, is there meant horse meat, like as by the coigny is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their coignies not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning. Spenser on Ireland.

4. The estate given to servants.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of livery coats afforded. Hosker.

I think, it is our way.

If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her livery. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery.

That see I by our faces. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

Ev'ry lady cloth'd in white,
And crown'd with oak and laurel ev'ry knight,
Are servants to the leaf, by liveries known
Of innocence. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

On others int'rest her gay livery flings,
Int'rest that waves on party-colour'd wings;
Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes,
And as she turns the colours fall or rise. Dunciad.

If your dinner mercenary, you were teased by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladle-ful of broth on one or two of their liveries. Swift.

5. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green,
Proudly bedeck'd in April's livery. Sidney.

Mistake me not for my complexion
The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred. Shakespeare.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans,
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride,
With spots of gold and purple, azure, green. Milton.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey

LIVERYMAN. n. f. [livery and man.]

1. One who wears a livery; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liverymen frequently railing at their mistresses. Arbuthnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVES. n. f. [the plural of life.]

So short is life, that every peasant strives,
In a farm house, or field, to have three lives. Dante.

LIVID. adj. [lividus, Latin; livide, French.] Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not feated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mafs of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

LIVIDITY. n. f. [lividitas, French; from livid.] Discolouration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darknes or lividity of the countenance. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LIVING. n. f. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

LOA

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots, as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children. Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. Mark.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases. L'Estrange's Table.

2. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make. Habberd's Tale.

Then may I fet the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Shakespeare.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,
Or shortly you'll dig for your living. Denham.

Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adultery, Mrs.
Bull told her husband, that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections. Arbuth.

LIVINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whole temper pollutes themselves. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

LIVRE. n. f. [French.] The sum by which the French re-con their money, equal nearly to our shilling.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Latin.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine. Arbuth.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their calcareous form. Boyle.

LIXIVATE. adj. [lixivatus, French; from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixivated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder.

Lixivate salts, to which pot ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispoise them to part readily with their tincture. Boyle.

LIXIVUM. n. f. [Lat.] Lye; water impregnated with salt of whatsoever kind; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of wormwood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to wormwood than to several other plants. Boyle.

LIZARD. n. f. [lizard, French; lacerta, Latin.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten sometimes in Arabia and Judea, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures. Catlett.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided.

As venomous toads, or lizard's dreadful stings. Shakespeare.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

LIZARDITAL. n. f. A plant.

LIZARDSTONE. n. f. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

L.L.D. n. f. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

Lo. interj. [la, Saxon.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood. Shakespeare.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakespeare.

Now must the world point at poor Catharine,
And say, lo! there is mad Petrichio's wife. Shakespeare.

Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh. Shakespeare's Othello.

Thou did'st utter,
I am yours for ever.

—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice. Shak.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth. Roscom.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine To blast our bold design. Dryden's Albion.

LOACH. n. f. [loche, French.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the deepest stream: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length:
he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattels like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots:
his

his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gessner, and other learned physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a very small worm, at the bottom, for he very seldom or never rises above the gravel. Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. f. [plave, Saxon.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,
And fought his wonted shelter. Dryden's Num's Tale.

2. Any thing that deresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray on Creation.

3. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

To LOAD. v. a. [plavan, Saxon.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils, Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shakespeare.

Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the beast. Jsa. xlv. 1.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Lacke.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wijeman.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, laden with death, still sounds
In my stunned ears. Adisson's Cato.

LOAD. n. f. [more properly load, as it was anciently written from leasan, Saxon, to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air. Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the load mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Cowley's Survey of Cornwall.

LOADER. n. f. [from load.] He who loads.

LOADSMAN. n. f. [lade and nan.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

LOADSTAR. n. f. [more properly as it is in Maunder's, load-star, from leasan, to lead.] The polestar, the cynosure, the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompense of my overthrow. Spenser.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.

O happy fair!

Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air;
More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear. Shak.

Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth, Lodestone to hearts, and loadstar to all eyes. Davies.

LOADSTONE. n. f. [properly lodestone or leading stone.] See LOADSTAR. The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour: it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of attracting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Hill's Materia Medica.

LOAF. n. f. [from laap or lap, Saxon.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a thive, we know. Shakespeare.

The bread and bread corn in the town sufficed not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into proportion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf
a day. Hayward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Digby.

2. Any mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mort.

LOAM. n. f. [lun, laam, Saxon; limus, Latin; from lavan, a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuous, tenacious, earth; marl.

The purest treasure

LOA

Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shakespeare.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To linear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends, and girders which he in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

LOAMY. adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, especially if it be not loamy and binding.

Auricula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded. Boyle's Calendar.

LOAN. n. f. [plan, Saxon.] Any thing lent; any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be answered and paid, the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the fret,
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,
Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dryden.

LOATH. adj. [lað, Saxon.] Unwilling; disliking; not ready;
not inclined.

These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loath to leave the company of so many things united in perfection. Sidney.

She thanked them in her disdainful wife,
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to shew
Of prince's worthy. Fairy Queen, b. i.

When he heard her answers loath, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distress. Fairy Queen.

To speak so indirectly, I am loath;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.

Long doth the stay, as loath to leave the land,
From whose soft side the first did issue make,
She tastes all places, turns to ev'ry hand,
Her flow'ry banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loath
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton's Par. Lost.

To pardon willing, and to punish loath;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both:
Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live. Waller.

When Aeneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loath to destroy such a matter-piece of nature. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,
First views the torrent he would venture o'er;
And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and lother to go round:
Then dipping in his staff does trial make How deep it is; and, sighing, pulls it back. Dryden.

I know you thy to be oblig'd;
And still more loath to be oblig'd by me. Southern.

To LOATHE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.

Parthenia had learned both liking and mistaking, loving and loathing. Sidney.

They with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness. Fa. Qs.

The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loath to drink of the water. Exod. vii. 18.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath!
For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood. Dryden.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes. Rowe.

Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and cloaths. Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.

Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long for bread. Cowley.

Our appetite is extinguished with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Rogers's Sermon.

3. To see food with dislike.

Loathing is a symptom well known to attend disorders of the stomach; and the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHE. v. n. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The griffy toadfoot grown there might I see,
And loathing paddocks, lording on the fame. Spenser.

LOB

LO'ATHER. n. f. [from loath.] One that loaths.

LO'ATHFUL. adj. [from loath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.

Which he did with loathful eyes behold.

He would no more endure.

2. Abhorred; hated.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,

Whole base effect, through cowardly distrust

Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven flee.

LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLY. adj. [from loath.] Hatelul; abhorred; exciting hatred.

An huge great dragon, horrible in fight,

Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,

With murd'rous ravin.

The people fear me; for they do observe

Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature.

Sour-ey'd disdain, and discord shall bestow

The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,

That you shall hate it.

LO'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them.

Loathly opposite I stood

To his unnat'ral purpose.

That shews that you from nature loathly stray,

That suffer not an artificial day.

LO'ATHNESS. n. f. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

Weight'd between loaths and obedience,

Which end the beam should bow.

Pray you, look not sad,

Nor make replies of loaths.

As long a term as yet we have to live,

The loaths to depart would grow.

After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and loaths to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon.

LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.

The fresh young fly

Did much disdain to subject his desire

To loathsome loth, or hours in case to waste.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules

To loathsome sickness.

If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.

The sweetest honey

Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,

And in the taste confounds the appetite.

LO'ATHSOMENESS. n. f. [from loathsome.] Quality of raising hatred.

The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches.

LOAVES, plural of loaf.

Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, and he poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past.

LOB. n. f.

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.

Farewell, thou lob of spirits, I'll be gone,

Our queen and all her elves come here anon.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.

Crowders, whom in irons bound,

Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound.

3. A big worm.

For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling are the chief.

To LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,

And their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips.

LOBBY. n. f. [from lob.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with 'tendance,

Rain sacrificial whifflings in his ears,

Make sacred even his stirrup.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him.

Try your back stairs, and let the lobby wait,

A strataegem in war is no deceit.

LOBE. n. f. [from lob.] A division; a distinct part;

used commonly for a part of the lungs.

LOC

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell

To that prodigious mass, for their eternal meal.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs.

LO'BER. n. f. [from lob.] A crustaceous fish.

Those that cast their shell, are the lobes, the crab, and craw-fish.

It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other.

LOCAL. adj. [from loc.] French; locus, Latin.

1. Having the properties of place.

By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed. I go to prepare a place for you.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,

Leaving material worlds, and local skies.

2. Relating to place.

The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might happily enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed.

3. Being in a particular place.

Dream not of their fight,

As of a duel, or the local wounds

Of head, or heel.

How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum, without a change in the body moved?

LOCALITY. n. f. [from loc.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.

That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned.

LOCALLY. adj. [from loc.] With respect to place.

Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers.

LOCATION. n. f. [from loc.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.

To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than that it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location.

LOC. n. f. A lake. Scottish.

A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle.

LOCK. n. f. [from loc.] A lock, in both senses.

1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.

No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,

But with that piercing noise flew open quit or braff.

We have locks to safeguard necessities,

And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.

A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock, another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock.

3. A hug; a grapple.

They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tuggle or grapple, and to close.

4. Any inclosure.

Sergeithus, eager with his beak to press

Betwixt the rival gally and the rock,

Shuts up th' unwieldy centaur in the lock.

5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.

Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten.

A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemed the looked into it, and dressed her green locks by that running river.

His grizly locks, long grown and unbound,

Disordered hung about his shoulders round.

The bottom was set against a lock of wool, and the found was quite dead.

They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads.

A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope.

Beneath the locks that are grown white

Two locks graceful hung behind

In equal curls, and well-conspir'd, to deck

With shining ringlets her smooth ivory neck.

6. A

LOD

6. A tuft.

I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay.

LO'CK. v. a. [from loc.] To shut or fasten with locks.

1. To shut or fasten with locks.

The garden, seated on the level floor,

She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,

Thought all secure.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.

I am locked in one of them;

If you do love me, you will find me out.

Our former fable in our strong-barr'd gates.

Then seek to know those things which make us blest,

And having found them, lock them in thy breast.

The frightened dame

If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those within are infringed, and all their acts as void as if they were locked in.

One conduces to the poets completing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle.

The father of the gods

Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,

And lock'd 'em fast within, oppress'd with mountain loads.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less.

Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them.

Your wine lock'd up,

Plain milk will do the feat.

3. To close fast.

Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes.

LO'CK. v. n.

1. To become fast by a lock.

For not of wood, nor of enduring brags,

Doubly disparted it did lock and clofe,

That when it locked, none might through it pass.

2. To unite by mutual infection.

Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface; as much of their surfaces touches as makes them cohere.

LO'CKER. n. f. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.

I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat.

LO'CKER. n. f. [from lock.] A small lock; any catch or spring to fasten a necklace, or other ornament.

Where knights are kept in narrow lists,

With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists.

LO'CKRAM. n. f. A sort of coarse linen.

The kitchen malikin pines

Her richest lockram 'bout her reeky neck,

Clambring the walls to eye him.

LO'CKRON. n. f. A kind of rannuculus.

LOCOMOTION. n. f. [from loc and motus, Lat.] Power of change-ing place.

All progression, or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet.

LOCOMOTIVE. adj. [from loc and move, Lat.] Changing place;

having the power of removing or changing place.

I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals.

In the night too oft he kicks,

Or shows his locomotive tricks.

An animal cannot well be defined from any particular, or-ganical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks.

LO'CUST. n. f. [from loc.] A locust, Latin.

The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fell like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they met with.

Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries.

To-morrow will I bring the locust

LOG

LO'DGER. n. f. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.
Bafe tyke, call't thou me host? now, I scorn the term;
nor shall my Nell keep lodgers. Shakespeare's Henry V.
There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers. Grawt's Bills.
Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families. Harvey.
The gentlewoman begged me to step; for that a lodger
she had taken in was run mad. Tailor, No. 33.
Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger, that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and fivepence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and fourpence halfpenny. Arbutnot.

2. One that resides in any place.
Look in that breast, most dirty dear;
Say, can you find but one such lodger there? Pope.

LO'DGING. n. f. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.
I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it. Shakespeare's Othello.
Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance. Bacon.
At night he came
To his known lodgings, and his country dame. Dryden.
He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of
Wits take lodgings in the found of Bow. Pope.

2. Place of residence.
Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,
The nest of love, the lodging of delight,
The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure,
The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright. Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert.
The hounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

4. Convenience to sleep on.
Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging. Ray on Creation.

LOFT. n. f. [loft, Welsh; or from lift.]

1. A floor.
There is a traverse placed in a loft above. Bacon.

2. The highest floor.
To lull him in his slumber soft,
A tickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
And ever drizzling rain upon the lofts,
Mixt with a murmuring wind. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. Rooms on high.
Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder.
A weasel once made shift to sink
In at a corn loft, through a chink. Pope.

LOFTILY. adv. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place.
Proudly; haughtily.

2. They speak wickedly concerning oppression; they speak loftily. Psal. lxxiii. 8.

3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.
My lowly verse may loftily arise,
And lift itself unto the highest skies. Fairy Queen.

LOFTINESS. n. f. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation.

2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.
Three poets in three distant ages born;
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty; in both the last. Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness.
Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure. Collier.

LOFTY. adj. [from loft, or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.
See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
See nodding forests on the mountains dance. Pope's Messiah.

2. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.
He knew
Himself to sing and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.

3. Proud; haughty.
Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lowly servant, but a lofty mate. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Lofty and four to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that fought him, sweet as Summer. Shak.

LOG. n. f. [The original of this word is logos, from logos, the true original.] A thapsel bulky piece of wood.

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.
Would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that thou'rt join'd to pile. Shakespeare.
The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens, where no logs are. Bacon.
Some logs, perhaps, upon the waters swim,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,

LOG

And hollow'd first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.
The frighted dameThe lag in secret lock'd. Dryden's Ovid.

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a eby, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbutnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin. Cabot.
A meat offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

LOGARITHMS. n. f. [logarithmus, Fr. logos; and arithmos.]Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchison, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr.
Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers, contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion, as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical one: for instance,

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (0), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms. The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dissecting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trifecting them for the cube, and so on. *Harris.*LOGGERS. *n. f.*Loggers is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unwholesome games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the game which is now called kittlepins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling. *Hammer.*LOGGERSHEAD. n. f. [logger, Dutch, stupid and head, or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickfoul.

Where hast been, Hal?

With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hogheads. *Shakespeare's Henry IV.*Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other peoples fires. *LeStrange.*To fall to LOGGERSHEADS. *s. pons.*A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master. *LeStrange.*LOGGERSHEAD. adj. [from loggerhead.] Dull; stupid; doltish.You loggerheaded and unpollish'd groom, what! no attendance? *Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.*LOGICK. n. f. [logique, French; logica, Latin, from logos.]

The art of reasoning.

Logic is the art of using reason well in our inquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others. *Watts's Logic.*Talk logic with acquaintance, And practise rhetoric in your common talk. *Shakespeare.*By a logic that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon it as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom. *Clarendon.*Here foam'd rebellious logic, gag'd and bound,
There script fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground. *Pope.*LOGICAL. adj. [from logic.]

1. Pertaining to logic; taught in logic.
The heretic complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties. Hooker, b. iii.

Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy. *Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.*We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them. Baker.

2. Skilled in logic; furnished with logic.
A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head. Addison's Spect. No. 291.

LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logic.How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either. *Prior.*LOGICIAN. n. f. [logician, French; logos, Latin.] A teacher or professor of logic; a man versed in logic.If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters. Bacon.
If we may believe our logician, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter. *Addison.*Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur. Dunciad, b. iv.
A logician

distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a meer kind of sophistry and logomachy. *Howel.*LO'GWOOD. *n. f.*Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture; it is brought to us in very large and thick blocks or logs, and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong, red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy. It has been long known by the dyers, and was but lately introduced in medicine, and is found to be an excellent astringent. *Hill's Mat. Med.*To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water. *Peachment on Drawing.*LO'HOOK. *n. f.*Loback is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called Eclegma's, lambatives, or Blanket my loins. *Shakespeare's King Lear.*Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb!

Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. *Shakespeare's Rich. III.*Virgin mother, hail!
High in the love of heav'n! yet from my loins
Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the son Of God most high. *Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.*A multitude! like which the populous north Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass
Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons Came like a deluge on the fourth.To LOITER. v. n. [loiterer, Dutch.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle. *Milton.*Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries. *Shakespeare.*Whence this long delay?
You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away. *Dryden.*Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away. *Locke.*If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity. *Rogers's Sermons.*LOITERER. n. f. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry,
And daily to loiterers have a good eye.
The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers. *Tusser's Husb.*Where hast thou been, thou loiterer?
Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd,
To search if thou wert come. *Orway.*Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants. *Mare.*Ever listless loiterers, that attend
No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend. *Pope.*To LOLLY. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known.
Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.
So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me. Shakespeare's Othello.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. *Shakespeare's Othello.*Close by a softly murmur'ing stream,
Where lovers us'd to loll and dream. *Hudibras, p. i.*To loll on couches, rich with cytron beds,
And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. *Dryden.*Void of care he lolls in Tyrian beds,
And leaves his business to be done by fate. Dryden's Pers.
But wanton now, and lolling at our ease,
We suffer all the inveterate ills of peace. Dryden.

And with his lolling tongue assay'd the taste. *Dryden.*To LOLL. v. n. To put out: used of the tongue exerted.All authors to their own defects are blind;
Hadt thou but, Janus-like, a face behind,
To see the people, when play mouths they make,
To mark their fingers pointed at thy back,
Their tongues loll'd out a foot. *Dryden's Persus.*By Strymon's freezing dreams he sat alone,
Trees bent their heads to hear him sing his wrongs,
Fierce tigers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues. *Dryden's Virgil.*By the wolf were laid the martial twins;
Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung,
The foster-dam loll'd out her fawning tongue. *Dryden.*LOMP. n. f. A kind of roundish fish.LONE. adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary.
Here the lone hour a blank of life displays. Savage.
Thus vanish sceptres, coronets and balls,

 1. To cut the branches of trees.
 Gentle niece, what stern ungente hands
 Have lopp'd, and heav'd, and made thy body bare
 Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments. Shakespeare.

Like to pillars,
 Or hollow'd bodies, made of oak or fir,
 With branches lopp'd in wood, or mountain fell'd. Milt.
 The plants, whose luxury was lopp'd,
 Or age with crutches underprop'd. Cleaveland.

The oak, growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopp'd, is still the same oak. Locke.
 The hook the bore, instead of Cynthia's spear,
 To lop the growth of the luxuriant year. Pope.

2. To cut any thing.
 The gardener may lop religion as he please.
 So long as there's a head,
 Hither will all the mountain spirits fly;
 Lop that but off. Dryden's Sp. Friar.

All that denominated it paradise was lopp'd off by the devils, and that only left which it enjoyed in common with its neighbour countries. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

I'm sure in needless bonds it poets ties,
 Procrustes like, the ax or wheel applies,
 To lop the mangled sense, or stretch it into size. Smith.

LOR. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. That which is cut from trees.
 Or sicker thy head very tottie is,
 So on thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss;
 Now thyself hath lost both lop and top,
 As my budding branch thou would'st crop. Spenser.

Nor should the boughs grow too big, because they give opportunity to the rain to soak into the tree, which will quickly cause it to decay, so that you must cut it down, or else both body and lop will be of little value. Mortimer.

2. [Lappa, Swedish.] A flea.
 LOPE. pret. of leap. Obsolete. This is retained in Scotland.
 With that sprang forth a naked swain,
 With spotted wings like peacock's train,
 And laughing lope to a tree. Spenser's Pastoral.

LO'PER. n. f. [from lop.] One that cuts trees.
 LO'PPERED. adj. Coagulated; as, loppered milk. Ainsworth.
 And thus it is still called in Scotland.

LOQUACIOUS. adj. [loquax, Latin.]

 Blind British bards, with volant touch Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes Prove to be harmless revels. Philips.

3. Blabbing; not secret.
 LOQUACITY. n. f. [loquacitas, Latin.] Too much talk.
 Why loquacity is to be avoided, the wife man gives sufficient reason for, in the multitude of words there wanteth not fin. Ray on Creation.

Too great loquacity, and too great taciturnity by fits. Arb.
 LORD. n. f. [hlaford, Saxon.]
 1. Monarch; ruler; governor.

He made not lord.
 Of Athens he was lord. Milton.
 We have our author's only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren. Locke.

They call'd their lord Afton to the game,
 He shook his head in answer to the name. Addison.
 O'er love, o'er fear, extends his wide domain, Unconquer'd lord of pleasure and of pain. Pa. of hu. Wishes.

2. Master; supreme person.
 But now I was the lord
 Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
 Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
 This house, these servants, and this same myself
 Are yours, my lord. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

LOR

3. A tyrant; an oppressive ruler.

8. A baron.
 9. An honorary title applied to officers; as, lord chief justice, lord mayor, and lord chief baron.

To LORD. v. n. To domineer; to rule despotically.
 Ungracious lord of love! what law is this,
 That me thou makest thus tormented be?
 The whiles the lordship in licentious bliss
 Of her free will, scorneth both thee and me. Spenser.

I see them lording it in London streets. Shakespeare.
 Those huge tracts of ground they lorded over begat wealth, wealth usher'd in pride. Howell's Vocal Forest.

They had by this possess'd the tow'rs of Gath,
 And lorded over them whom now they serve. Milton's Ag.
 I should choose rather to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our lord, than by a denial of truths, through blood and perjury, wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South's Sermons.

But if thy passions lord it in thy breast,
 Art thou not still a slave?
 The valour of one man th' afflicted throne
 Imperial, that once lorded o'er the world, Sustain'd. Philips.

The civilizers! the disturbers say,
 The robbers, the corrupters of mankind!
 Proud vagabonds! who make the world your home,
 And lord it where you have no right. Philips's Britons.

LO'RDING. n. f. [from lord.] Lord in contempt or ridicule.
 I'll question you
 Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys.
 You were pretty lordings then? Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

To lordings proud I tune my lay,
 Who feast in bower or hall;
 Though dukes they be, to dukes I lay,
 That pride will have a fall. Swift.

LO'RDING. n. f. A diminutive lord.
 Trampus, of amphibious breed,
 By the dam from lordings sprung,
 By the fire exhal'd from dung. Swift.

LO'RDLINESS. n. f. [from lordly.]

2. Proud; haughty; imperious; insolent.
 So bad a peer—
 —As who, my lord?
 —Why, as yourself, my lord?
 An't like your lordly, lord protectorship? Shakespeare.

Of me as of a common enemy,
 So dreaded once, may now exasperate them,
 I know not: lords are lordly in their wine. Milt. Agon.

Expect another message more imperious,
 More lordly thund'ring than thou wilt bear. Milton.
 Every rich and lordly swain,
 With pride wou'd drag about her chain. Swift.

LO'RDLY. adu. Imperiously; despotically; proudly,
 So when a tyger sucks the bullock's blood,
 A famish'd lion, issuing from the wood,
 Roars lordly fierce, and challenges the food, Dryden.

LO'RDSHIP. n. f. [from lord.]
 1. Dominion; power.
 Let me never know that any base affection should get any lordship in your thoughts.

It being set upon such an insensible rising of the ground, it gives the eye lordship over a good large circuit. Stidney.

They which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles, exercise lordship over them, and their great ones exercise authority upon them. Mark x. 42.

The Trojan honour and the Roman boast, Admir'd when living, and ador'd when lost. Dryden.

We should never quite lose sight of the country, though we are sometimes entertained with a distant prospect of it.

5. To have any thing gone so as that it cannot be found, or had again.
But if to honour lost 'tis still decreed
For you my bowl shall flow, my stocks shall bleed;
Judge and assert my right, impartial Jove. Pope's Odyssey.

When men are openly abandoned, and lost to all shame, they have no reason to think it hard, if their memory be reproached. Swift.

6. To bewilder.
I will go lose myself,
And wander up and down to view the city. Shakespeare.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

When the mind pursues the idea of infinity, it uses the ideas and repetitions of numbers, which are so many distinct ideas, kept bett by number from running into a confused heap, wherein the mind loses itself. Locke.

7. To deprive of.
How should you go about to lose him a wife he loves with so much passion. Temple.

LOT

8. To kill; to destroy.

9. To throw away; to employ ineffectually.
He has merit, good nature, and integrity, that are too often lost upon great men, or at least are not all three a match for flattery. Pope's Letters.

10. To miss; to part with, so as not to recover.
These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.

To LOSE. v. n.

1. Not to win.
We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakespeare.

2. To decline; to fail.
Widom in discourse with her
Losses discount'nanc'd, and like folly shews. Milton.

LO'SABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.
Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it, be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not losable
by them. Boyle.

LO'SEL. n. f. [from lojan, to perish.] A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.

Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.

A loset wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His bair breast. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

And losels lifted high, where I did look,
I mean to turn the next leaf of the book. Hubbard's Tale.

Be not with work of losels wit defamed,
Ne let such verses poetry be named. Hubbard's Tale.

By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losels by losels doth flow
More heere then is needful to tell. Tusser's Husbandry.

And, loset, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

LO'SER. n. f. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing;
one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope; the contrary to winner or gainer.

With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakespeare.

No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor's holy Living.

Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. South's Sermons.

It cannot talk, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.

A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief,
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief. Dryden.

LOSS. n. f. [from lose.]

1. Forfeiture; the contrary to gain.
The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hosker, b. v.

An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter is born to his loss. Ecclesi.

The statement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his income, and is a clear loss. Locke.

2. Miss.
If he were dead, what would betide of me?
—No other harm but loss of such a lord.

—The loss of such a lord includes all harms, Shakespeare.

3. Deprivation.
Her fellow ships from far her loss decri'd;
But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside. Dryden.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle.
Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend. South's Sermons.

Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to close with. Baker's Refl. on Learning.

6. Useless application.
It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse. Aldrich.

LOST. participial adj. [from lose.] No longer perceptible.
In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coat,
And woody mountains, half in vapours lost. Pope's Odyssey.

LOU. n. f. [blaut, Gothic; plor, Saxon; lot, Dutch.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.
Kala at length concluded my ling'ring lot;
Disdain me not, although I be not fair, Who

LOV

Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
Doth beauty keep which never fun can burn, Sidney, b. i.

Not forms do turn,
Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not,
we lose what we have already. L'Estrange's Fables.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope's Odyssey.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.
Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. Lev, xvi. 8.

Their talks in equal portions she divides,
And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryden's Virg.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to shew, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger.

Notes on the Odyssey.
3. It seems in Shakespeare to signify a lucky or wished chance.
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks.

My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius. Shakespeare.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes: as, to pay lot and lot.

LOVE tree or nettle tree. n. f. [Celtic.] See LOTOS.

The leaves of the love tree are like those of the nettle; the flowers consist of five leaves, expanded in form of a rose, containing many short stamens in the bosom: the fruit, which is a roundish berry, grows single in the bosom of its leaves.

The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

LOTOS. n. f. [Latin.] See LOTRE.

The trees around them all their food produce,
Lotos, the name divine, nectarous juice. Pope's Odyssey.

LO'TION. n. f. [lotio, Latin; lotion, French.]

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with; from lavo, to wash.

In lotion in women's cases, he orders two potions of hellebore macerated in two cytolæ of water. Arbutnot on Coins.

LO'TTERY. n. f. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.] A game of chance; a sortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high-fighted tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by lottery. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a kind of lottery for their work.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
Does man, her slave, oppress, Still various and unconstant still,
Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
And makes a lottery of life. Dryden's Horace.

LO'VAGE. n. f. [lovingium, Latin.]

The lobes of the loving leaves are cut about their borders like those of parsley; the flower consists, for the most part, of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose; each of these flowers are succeeded by two oblong, gibbous, furrowed seeds, which on one side have a leafy border. This plant is often used in medicine. Miller.

LOUD. adj.

1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.
Contenting on the Lesbian shore,
His prowess Philomelides confess'd,
And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor blest'd. Pope.

The numbers soft and clear,
Gently steal upon the ear;
Now louder, and yet louder rise,
And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope's St. Cecilia.

2. Clamorous; turbulent.
She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house.

LO'UDLY. adv. [from loud.]

1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.
The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.

2. Clamorously.
I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.

LO'UDNESS. n. f. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or furrowiness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have fallen out into complaint or loudness. South's Sermons.

To LOVE. v. a. [lojan, Saxon.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

LOV

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service;
It is to be all made of fantasy,
All made of passion, and all made of wilfulness;
All adoration, duty, and obedience;
All humbleness, all patience, all impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakespeare. As you like it.

I could not love I'm sure
One who in love were wife. Cowley.

The jealous man withes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison's Spectator, N. 170.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.
None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew;
Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me.

3. To regard with parental tenderness.
And much above myself I lov'd them too. Cowley.

He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. John xiv. 21.

4. To be pleased with.
Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh: we see that salmons and finelts love to get into rivers, though against the stream. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 703.

Wit, eloquence, and poetry;
Arts which I love'd. Cowley.

5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.
Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart. Deut. vi. 5.

LOVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The passion between the sexes.
Hearken to the birds love-learned song,
The dewie leaves among! Spenser's Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on,
I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shakespeare.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakespeare.

What! have I loved love letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Shakespeare.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
That lik'd, but had a rougher talk in hand
Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakespeare.

What need a vermil-tinctur'd lip for that,
Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn. Milton.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
Not wedlock treachery, endang'ring life. Milton's Agon.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.

You know y' are in my pow'r by making love. Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
And love, and love-born confidence be thine. Pope.

And these love-darting eyes must roll no more. Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.
Death grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st,
And kiss me as thy wife; misery's love,
O come to me! Shakespeare's King John.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants. Shakespeare.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Dan, i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil, i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another. Rem, xiii. 35.

Unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Ledean stars, so fam'd for love;

3. Courtship.
Demetrius
Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
And won her soul. Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream.

If you will marry make your loves to me,
My lady is bespoken. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye. Shakespeare.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign godd of human nature. Bacon's Essays.

4. Tenderness; parental care.
No religion that ever, was so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, which is the most powerful argument to the love of God. Tillotson's Sermons.

5. Liking; inclination to: as, the love of one's country.

6. Object beloved.
Open the temple gates unto my love.
If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue;
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee, and be thy love. Shakespeare.

The

LOV

- The banish'd never hopes his love to see. Dryden.
The lover and the love of human kind. Pope.
7. Lewdness.
He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shaksp. Rich. III.
8. Unreasonable liking.
The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason. Taylor's holy living.
Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.
9. Fondness; concord.
Come love and health to all!
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shak.
Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.
10. Principle of union.
Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrap up into one desire. Saunders's Sermons.
11. Picturelike representation of love.
The lovely babe was born with ev'ry grace:
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loves bestow. Dryden's Ovid.
12. A word of endearment.
'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
13. Due reverence to God.
I know that you have not the love of God in you. John.
Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.
The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Taylor.
14. A kind of thin silk stuff.
This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cyprus, or lovehead. Boyle on Colours.
- LOVEAPPLE. n. f.

LOW

4. In a state of subjection.
How comes it that, having been once so low brought, and thoroughly subjected, they afterwards lifted up themselves so strongly again.
To LOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably misprinted for lower.
The value of guineas was lowed from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings.
To LOW. v. n. [pagan, Saxon.] The adjective low, not high, is pronounced lo; the verb low, to below, lou.] To below as a cow.
Doth the wild ass bray when he has grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder?
The maids of Argos, who, with frantic cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies.
Fair lo grac'd his shield, but lo now,
With horns exalted stands, and seems to low.
Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir,
The lowing herd, or fleecy sheep his care.
LOWELL. n. f. [Lacy, Dutch; leg, Saxon; or leg, Islandick, a flame, and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are awakened by a bell, and lured by a flame into a net. Low denotes a flame in Scotland; and to low, to flame.
LOWE. n. f.
Low, loe, comes from the Saxon leap, a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick lowo is a monument or barrow.
To LOWE. v. a. [from low.]
1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.
As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way,
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With haughty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the asserted power.
The suppliant nations
Bow to its ensigns, and with lower'd sails Confess the ocean's queen. Smith's Phœdrus and Hippolytus.
2. To suffer to sink down.
When the water of rivers issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall.
3. To lessen; to make less in price or value.
The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money.
Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest.
To LOWER. v. n. To grow less; to fall; to sink.
By revolution low'ring, does become
The opposite of itself.
To LOW'ER. v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word: if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather: if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance.]
1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.
Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious Summer by this son of York;
And all the clouds that low'rd upon our houses,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shaksp. Rich. III.
The low'ring spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.
When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes.
The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison's Cato.
If on Swithin's feast the welkin low'rs,
And ev'ry penthouse streams with hasty show'rs,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain. Gay.
2. To frown; to pout; to look fullen.
There was Diana when Actæon saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to let forth tears of anger. Stanley.
He mounts the throne, and Juno took her place,
But fullen discontent sat low'ring on her face;
Then, impatient of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.
LOW'ER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Cloudiness; gloominess.
2. Cloudiness of look.
Philoclea was jealous for Zelmane, not without so mighty a lower as that face could yield. Sidney, b. ii.
LOW'ERINGLY. adv. [from lower.] With cloudiness; gloomily.
LOW'ERMOST. adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.
Plants have their femal parts uppermost, living creatures have them lowermost.
It will also happen, that the same part of the pipe which was now lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in compa-

- riety to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts.
LOWLAND. n. f. [from low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.
What a devil's he?
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,
And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the baleful stench with all his force.
No nat'ral cause the found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs.
LOW'LY. adv. [from low.]
1. Humbly; without pride.
2. Meanly; without dignity.
LOW'LINESS. n. f. [from low.]
1. Humility; freedom from pride.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, steadfastness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them.
With lowliness majestick, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to with her stay,
Rose.
If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust.
2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.
They continued in that lowliness until the time that the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose.
The lowliness of my fortune has not yet brought me to flatter vice; and it is my duty to give testimony to virtue.
LOW'LY. adv. [from low.]
1. Humble; meek; mild.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart.
He did bend to us a little, and put his arms abroad: we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death.
With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began.
The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a being, and adore a nature so much superior to our own.
2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.
For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims.
3. Not lofty; not sublime.
For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see.
LOW'LY. adv. [from low.]
1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.
I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught; I know my business is but to the court.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perkd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.
2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.
Heav'n is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wife:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being.
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd.
LOW'N. n. f. [from low, Irish; low, Dutch, a stupid drone.] A scoundrel; a rascal.
King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown,
He thought them fustian all too dear,
And therefore call'd the taylor low.
LOW'NESS. n. f. [from low.]
1. Absence of height; small distance from the ground.
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth,
Or foison follow.
The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom.
In our Gothick cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness often opens it in breadth.
2. Meanness of condition, whether mental or external.
Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughter.
Now

LOZ

- Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lozings.
3. Want of rank; want of dignity.
The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lozings of condition.
4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness.
A transcendent height, as lozings me,
Makes her not see, or not show.
His style is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lozings, that of Perseus is the hardness of his metaphors.
5. Submissiveness.
The people were in such lozings of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so politic a king as his father.
6. Depression; dejection.
Hence proceeded that poverty and lozings of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person.
LOWTHOUGHTED. adj. [from low and thought.] Having the thoughts withheld from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow mindedness.
Above the fœneak and tip of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being O grace serene! Oh virtue heav'nly fair!
Divine oblation of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality!
LOWSPRITED. adj. [from low and spirit.] Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.
Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lozspirited moped creature.
LOXODROMICK. n. f. [from loxos and dromos; loxodromus, Lat.]
Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhumbs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick.
LOYAL. adj. [from loyal, Fr.]
1. Obedient; true to the prince.
Of Gloster's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot.
The regard of duty in that most loyal nation overcame all other difficulties.
Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.
2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.
Hail wedded love! by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure,
There Laodamia with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves.
LOYALIST. n. f. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.
The cedar, by the infestation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebirds.
LOYALTY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king.
The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And siter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd.
LOYALTY. n. f. [from loyal, French.]
1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.
Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith meer folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer.
To day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.
Of all their loyalties,
He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law required.
Unhaken, unfeduced, unterrify'd,
His loyalty he kept.
2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.
LOYZENGE. n. f. [from lozenge, French.] Of unknown etymology.
1. A rhomb.
The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or lozenge.
2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces,

LUB

- to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.
3. A cake of preserved fruit; both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.
LUB. a contraction for lubber.
LUBBER. n. f. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.
Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbers.
Lock up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards.
LUBBER. n. f. [of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbed, said by Jenius to signify in Danish fat.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky fellow; a booby.
For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And ling'ring lubbers loose many a penic.
These chafe the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath.
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy thrinking.
A notable lubber thou reportest him to be.
Tell how the drudging goblin sweat;
His shadowy flail hath threat'nd the corn,
That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fend.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state mankind bestride.
How can you name that superannuated lubber?
LUBBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky.
I came at Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy.
LUBBERLY. adv. Aukwardly; clumsily.
Merry andrew on the low rope copies lubberly the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high.
LUB. n. f. A game at cards.
Ev'n mighty pam who kings and queens o'erthrew,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu.
TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To make smooth or slippery; to smoothe.
There are aliments which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree.
The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the saponeous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate.
TO LUBRICITATE. v. n. [from lubricus, Latin.] To make smooth; to make slippery.
LUBRICITY. n. f. [from lubricus, Latin; lubricité, French.]
1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.
Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.
3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.
The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification.
He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconstancy of human affairs, and the lubricity of his subject.
A state of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune.
4. Wantonness; lewdness.
From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided.
LUBRIC. adj. [from lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.
Of short thick sobs, whose thund'ring volleys float
And roul themselves over her lubrick throat,
In panting murmurs.
2. Uncertain; unsteady.
I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubrick waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulph of fatality.
3. Wanton; lewd. [from lubrique, French.]
Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adulterate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encrease the steaming ordures of the stage.
LUBRICOUS. adj. [from lubricus, Latin.]
1. Slippery; smooth.
The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it.
2. Uncertain.
The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and preposterously resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions.

LUCE. n. f. [perhaps from lucus, Latin.] A pike full grown. They give the dozen white lucci in their coat. Shakep.

LUCK. adj. [lucens, Latin.] Shining; bright; splendid. I meant the day-star should not brighter rise, Nor lend like influence from his lucid feat. Benj. Johnson.

A spot like which perhaps Astronömer in the sun's lucid orb, Through his glass'd optick tube yet never saw. Milton.

LUCID. n. f. [lucidus, Latin; lucide, French.] 1. Shining; bright; glittering.

Over his lucid arms A military vest of purple flow'd; Livelier than Melibæan. Milton.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light. Ray.

If at the same time a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm. Newton's Opticks.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold, And Phœbus warm the rip'ning ore to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.

Of Abbana and Phœbus, lucid streams. Milt. Par. Lost.

On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. Gulliver's Trav.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long diffusions of the two houses, which, although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall, Strike through and make a lucid interval; But Shadwell's genuine night admits no rays, His rising fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired he would please to let me see his book. Tatler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience. Bentley's Sermons.

LUCIDITY. n. f. [lucidus, Latin.] Splendor; brightness. Di.

LUCIFER. adj. [lucifer, Latin.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is in itself not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt. Boyle.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lax and facis, Latin.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge; and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorifick, is interrupted. Grew.

LUCK. n. f. [geluck, Dutch.] 1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

He forc'd his neck into a noose, To shew his play at salt and loose; And when he chanc'd to escape, mistook For art and subtlety, his luck. Hudibras.

Some such method may be found by human industry or luck, by which compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

2. Fortune, good or bad.

Glad of such luck the luckless lucky maid, A long time with that savage people staid; To gather breath in many miseries. Sponser.

Farewel, good Salisbury, and good luck go with thee. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I did demand what news from Shrewsbury. He told me, that rebellion had ill luck, And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold. Shakespeare.

That part of mankind who have had the justice, or the luck, to pass, in common opinion, for the wisest, have followed a very different scent. Temple.

LUD

Such, how highly scater they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. Sante.

The guests are found too num'rous for the treat, But all, it seems, who had the luck to eat, Swear they ne'er tasted more delicious meat. Tate's Jew.

LUCKILY. adv. [from lucky.] Fortunately; by good hap. It is the pencil thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth, to express the foam, which the painter with all his skill could not form. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

It happens luckily for the establishment of a new race of kings upon the British throne, that the first of this royal line has all high qualifications. Addison.

LUCKINESS. n. f. [from lucky.] Good fortune; good hap; casual happiness.

He who sometimes lights on truth, is in the right but by chance; and I know not whether the luckiness of the accident will excuse the irregularity of his proceeding. Locke.

LUCKLESS. adj. [from luck.] Unfortunate; unhappy. Glad of such luck, the luckless lucky maid, A long time with that savage people staid, To gather breath in many miseries. Fairy Queen.

Never shall my thoughts be base, Though luckless; yet without disgrace. Suckling.

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.

Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Spitt.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL. v. a. [lulle, Danish; lullo, Latin.] 1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound To lull him fast asleep, that by it lay. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Such sweet compulsion doth in mulick lie, To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.

These lull'd by nightingales embracing slept. Milton.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find a foe it shall not be his hap; And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap; No more these scenes my meditations aid, Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

By the vocal woods and waters lull'd, And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson's Spring.

LU'LABY. n. f. [lullus, Latin. Quem nutritum fuisse deum contentit Turnebus, from lull: it is observable that the nurses call sleep by, lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to lull babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kept, Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.

Philomel, with melody, Sing in your sweet lullaby; Shakespeare.

Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further. Shakespeare.

—Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakespeare.

LUN

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
Travelling east; and with her part averie
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

3. Shining; bright.

The most luminous of the prismatick colours are the yellow and orange: these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together. Newton's Opticks.

LUMP. n. f. [lump, Dutch.]

1. A small mass of any matter.

The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.

An Ombite wretch is pris'ner made;
Whole flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
In morsels cut. Tate.

Ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were sort'd well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dry.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Lacks.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shak. Henry VI.

Blush, bluish, thou lump of foul deformity. Shakespeare.

Why might not there have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together. Kail against Burnet.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All mens honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd Into what pinch he please. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

It is rare to find any of these metals pure; but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. The whole together; the gross.

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addison.

Other epidemical vices are rise and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley's Sermons.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.

To LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expenses ought to be lumped together. Ayliffe's Par.

Boccalini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Addison.

LUMPFISH. [lump and fish; lumpus, Lat.] A sort of fish.

LUMPING. adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.

Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth. Arbutnot.

LUMPIH. adj. [from lump.] Heavy; gross; dull; unactive; bulky.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy.
Love is all spirit: fairies sooner may Be taken tardy, when they night tricks play,
Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.

Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast
Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?
Philosophers and poets vainly strove
In every age the lumpish mals to move. Dryden.

LUMPISHLY. adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity.

LUMPIHNESS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Stupid heaviness.

LUMPY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LUNACY. n. f. [from luna, the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakespeare. As you like it.

LUN

Your kindred span your house,
As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakespeare.

There is difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.

LUNAR. adj. [lunare, Fr. lunaris, Latin.] Relating to the moon; under the dominion of the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The figure of its feed much resembles a horseshoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunary representation. Brewer's Vulg. Errors.

We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

LUNARY. n. f. [lunaria, Latin; lunare, Fr.] Moonwort.

Then sprinkles the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary distilling. Dryden's Nymphid.

LUNATED. adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.

LUNATICK. adj. [lunaticus, Latin.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms,
Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Shakespeare.

LUNATICK. n. f. A madman.

The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold;
The madman. Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.

I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Grant's Bills.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

If the lunatick be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for ever. Holzer on Time.

LUR

LURWORT. n. f. [pulmonaria, Lat.]

The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, whose upper part is cut into several segments; from its fitulous flower-cup, which is for the most part pentagonal, rises the point encompassed by four embryos, which afterwards become so many seeds inclosed in the flower-cup. Miller.

LUNISO/LAR. adj. [lunifolius, French; luna and folius, Lat.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.

LUNT. n. f. [lunt, Dutch.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.

LUPINE. n. f. [lupinus, French; lupinus, Latin.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterward turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.

When Protegenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peachment on Drawing.

Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden's Georg.

Protegenes, drawing the picture of Jalyus, took no other nourishment than lupines mixed with water, for fear of clogging his imagination by the luxury of his food. Dryden.

LURCH. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from Lurche, a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; lurche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lurche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the lurch. Denham.

But though th' art of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras, p. i.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Estrange's Fables.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best-meaning persons in the world? It is safe to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbutnot's Hist. of F. Bull.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison's Guardian.

To LURCH. v. n. [laeren, Dutch; or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving the fear of heav'n on my left-hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.

2. To lie in wait; we now rather use lurk.

While the one was upon wings, the other stood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Estrange.

To LURCH. v. a. [luror, Latin.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon's Essays.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea;
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurched all swords of th' garland. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South's Sermons.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South's Sermons.

3. To steal privily; to filch; to pilfer.

LURCHER. n. f. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of finders, lurchers, and setters. Tatler, No. 59.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the scolding lurcher flies;
Whilst ev'ry honest tongue stop thief refoinds. Gay.

2. [Lurca, Latin.] A glutton; a gourmandizer. Not used.

LURE. n. f. [lure, French; lure, Dutch.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakespeare.

This lure the cast abroad, thinking that this same and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon's Henry VII.

A great estate to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him. Bacon.

LUS

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tariffs, and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty, and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent. Milt. Par. Reg.

This stiffneck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

To LURE. v. n. [from the noun.] To call hawks.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill, I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken, or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

To LURE. v. a. To attract; to entice; to draw.

As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Par. Lost.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure
From this dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson's Spring.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye. Gay's Trivia.

LURID. adj. [luridus, Latin.] Gloomy; dismal.

Slow sitting o'er the lurid grove, Unusual darkness broods. Thomson's Summer.

To LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See LURCH.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Milbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

They lay not to live by their work,
But stealthily loiter and lurk. Tusser's Husbandry.

If sinners entice, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Prov. i. 11.

The wife, when danger or dishonour lurks, Safest, and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

See
The lurking gold upon the fatal tree:
Then rend it off. Dryden's Æn.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

LURKER. n. f. [from lurk.] A thief that lies in wait.

LURKINGPLACE. n. f. [lurk and place.] Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23.

LUSCIOUS. adj. [from delicious, say some; but Skinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

2. Sweet in a great degree.

The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as coloquintida. Shakespeare. Othello.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,
And shed the luscious liquor on the ground. Milton.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,
And raisins keep their luscious native taste. Dryden.

3. Pleasing; delightful.

He will bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase. South's Sermons.

LUSCIOUSLY. adv. [from luscious.] Sweet to a great degree.

LUSCIOUSNESS. n. f. [from luscious.] Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be greater indulgence in God, than to embitter sensualities whose lusciousness intoxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him. Decay of Piety.

Peas breed worms by reason of the lusciousness; and sweetness of the grain. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LUSERN. n. f. [lupus cervarinus, Latin.] A lynx.

LU'SORY. adj. [luforius, Latin.] Used in play.
There might be many entertaining contrivances for the instruction of children in geometry and geography, in such alluring and lufury methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

LUST. n. f. [lufus, Saxon; lust, Dutch.]

1. Carnal desire.
This our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn, Epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Lust, and rank thoughts. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
They are immoderately given to the lust of the flesh, making no conscience to get bastards. Abbot.
When a temptation of lust assaults thee, do not resist it by disputing with it, but flee from it, that is, think not at all of it. Taylor's holy Living.

2. Any violent or irregular desire.
I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satiated upon them.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor:
let them be taken in the crafty wiliness they imagined. Psal.
Virtue was represented by Hercules: he is drawn offering to strike a dragon; by the dragon are meant all manner of lusts. Peachment on Drawing.

All weigh our ads, and what'er seems unjust,
Impute not to necessity, but lust. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

3. Vigour; active power. Not used.
Trees will grow greater, and bear better fruit, if you put salt, or lees of wine, or blood, to the root: the cause may be, the increasing the lust or spirit of the root. Bacon.

TO LUST. v. n.

1. To desire carnally.
Inconstant man, that loveth all he saw,
And lusted after all that he did love. Roscommon.

2. To desire vehemently.
Giving sometimes prodigally; not because he loved them to whom he gave, but because he lusted to give. Sidney.
The Christian captives in chains could no way move themselves, if they should unadvisedly lust after liberty. Kneller.

3. To lift; to like. Out of use.
Their eyes swell with fatness; and they do even what they lust. Psal. lxxiii. 7.

He with good speed began to take his flight,
Over the fields in his frank lustiness. Spenser's Muirpots.

Where there is so great a prevention of the ordinary time, it is the lustiness of the child; but when it is less, it is some indisposition of the mother. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N°. 353.

Cappadocian slaves were famous for their lustiness, and being in good liking, were set on a stall to shew the good habit of their body, and made to play tricks before the buyers, to shew their activity and strength. Dryden's Persius.

LUT

LU'STLESS. adj. [from lust.] Not vigorous; weak. S. enfor.
LU'STRAL. adj. [lustralis, French; lustralis, Latin.] Used in purification.

His better parts by lustral waves refin'd,
More pure, and nearer to aetherial mind. Garth.

LUSTRATION. n. f. [lustration, French; lustratio, Lat.] Purification by water.

Job's religious care,
His sons assemblies, whole united prayer,
Like sweet perfumes, from golden censurs rise;
He with divine lustrations sanctifies. Sandys's Paraphrase.

That spirits are corporeal seems a conceit derogative unto himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow;
yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

What were all their lustrations but so many solemn purifying, to render both themselves and their sacrifices acceptable to their gods. South's Sermons.

Should Io's priest command
A pilgrimage to Merce's burning fane;
Through defarts they would seek the secret springs,
And holy water for lustration bring. Dryden's Juvenal.

By ardent pray'r, and clear lustration,
Purge the contagious spots of human weakness;
Impure no mortal can behold Apollo. Prior.

LU'STRE. n. f. [lustre, French.]

1. Brightness; splendour; glitter.
You have one eye left to see some mischief on him.
— Left it see more prevent it; out, vile gelly; where is thy lustre now? Shakespeare's King Lear.

To the foul time doth perfection give,
And adds fresh lustre to her beauty fill.
The scorching sun was mounted high,
In all its lustre, to the noonday sky. Addison's Ovid.

Past but some fleeting years, and these poor eyes,
Where now without a boast some lustre lies;
No longer shall their little honours keep,
But only be of use to read or weep. Prior.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair,
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. A scone with lights.
Ridotta tips, and dances till she see
The doubling lustres dance as quick as she. Pope's Horace.

3. Eminence; renown.
His ancestors continued about four hundred years, rather without obscurity than with any great lustre. Wotton.

I used to wonder how a man of birth and spirit could endure to be wholly insignificant and obscure in a foreign country, when he might live with lustre in his own. Swift.

4. [From lustre, Fr. lustron, Latin.] The space of five years.
Both of us have closed the tenth lustre, and it is high time to determine how we shall play the last act of the farce. Bolingbroke to Swift.

ground, with the very luxury of the trees will incorporate. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N°. 479.

4. Delicious fare.
He cut the side of the rock for a garden, and by laying on it earth, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

LY. v. n. [A very frequent termination both of names of places and of adjectives and adverbs: when ly terminates the name of a place, it is derived from leag, Saxon, a field;
when it ends an adjective or adverb, it is contracted from like,
like; as, beastly, beastlike; plainly, plainlike.]

LYCAN'THROPY. n. f. [lycantropie, French; λύκανος and άνθρωπος.] A kind of madness, in which men have the qualities of wild beasts.

He fees like a man in his sleep, and grows as much the wifer as the man that dreamt of a lycantropy, and was for ever after wary not to come near a river. Taylor.

LYKE. adj. for like. Spenser.

LYING. the participle of lie, whether it signifies to be recumbent, or to speak falsely, or otherwise.

They will have me whipt for speaking true, thou wilt have me whipt for lying, and sometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Many tears and temptations besal me by the lying in wait of the Jews. Acts xx. 19.

LYMPH. n. f. [lymph, French; lymph, Lat.] Water; transparent colourless liquor.

When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph, the most spirituous and elaborated part of the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LYMPHATED. adj. [lymphatus, Latin.] Mad. DiD.

LYMPHATIC. n. f. [lymphaticus, Fr. from lymph, Latin.]

The lymphatics are slender pellucid tubes, whose cavities are contracted at small and unequal distances: they are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving first a fine thin lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes the chylous fluid. Boyer's Phil. Principles.

Upon the death of an animal, the spirits may sink into the veins, or lymphatics and glandules. Floyer.

LYMPHEDUCT. n. f. [lymph and ductus, Latin.] A vessel which conveys the lymph.

The glands,
All artful knots, of various hollow threads,
Which lympheducts, an artery, nerve, and vein,
Involv'd and close together wound, contain. Blackmore.

LYNX. n. f. [Latin.] A spotted beast, remarkable for speed and sharp sight.

He that has an idea of a beast with spots, has but a confused idea of a leopard, it not being thereby sufficiently distinguished from a lynx. Locke.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam. Pope.

LYRE. n. f. [lyra, French; lyra, Latin.] A harp; a musical instrument to which poetry is, by poetical writers, supposed to be sung.

With other notes then to th' Orphean lyre. Milton.

My softest verse, my darling lyre,
Upon Euphelia's toilet lay. Prior.

He never touch'd his lyre in such a truly chromatick manner as upon that occasion. Arbuth. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

LYRICAL. adj. [lyricus, Latin; lyrique, French.] Pertaining to a harp, or to odes or poetry sung to an harp; singing to an harp.

All his trophies hung and acts enroll'd
In copious legend, or sweet lyrick song. Milton's Agonist.

Somewhat of the purity of English, somewhat of more equal thoughts, somewhat of sweetness in the numbers; in one word, somewhat of a finer turn, and more lyrick verse, is yet wanting. Dryden.

The lute neglected, and the lyrick muse,
Love taught my tears in sadder notes to flow,
And tun'd my heart to elegies of woe. Pope.

LYRICK. n. f. A poet who writes songs to the harp.

The greatest conqueror in this nation, after the manner of the old Grecian lyricks, did not only compose the words of his divine odes, but set them to musick himself. Addison.

LYRIST. [lyristes, Latin.] A musician who plays upon the harp.

His tender theme the charming lyrist chose Minerva's anger, and the direful woes
Which voyaging from Troy the victors bore. Pope.

MAC

- MAC Has, in English, one unvaried sound, by comparison of the lips; as, mine, tame, camp: it is never mute.
- MACARON. n. f. [macaron, Italian.]
1. A coarse, rude, low fellow; whence macaronic poetry, in which the language is purposely corrupted. Like a big wife, at sight of loathed meat, Ready to travail; so I sigh and sweat, To hear this macaron talk on in vain.
2. [Macaron, French, from macis.] A kind of sweet biscuit, made of flower, almonds, eggs, and sugar.
- MACAW-TREE. n. f.
- The macaw-tree is a species of the palm-tree, and is very common in the Caribbee islands, where the negroes pierce the tender fruit, whence it issues a pleasant liquor, which they are very fond of; and the body of the tree affords a solid timber, with which they make javelins, arrows, &c. and is supposed by some to be a sort of ebony.
- MACAW. n. f. A bird in the West-Indies.
- MAC. n. f. [magis, Saxon; maga, Spanish.]
1. An ensign of authority worn before magistrates. He mightily upheld that royal mac. Which now thou bear'st. Fairy Queen, b. ii. Death with his mac petrified smote. Milton.

If it should appear fit to bestow shipping in those harbours, it shall be very needful that there be a magazine of all necessary provisions and munitions. Raleigh's Essays.
Plain heroic magnitude of mind;
Their armories and magazines contemn. Milton's Agonist.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden's Virg.
Useful arms in magazines we place,
All rang'd in order, and dispos'd with grace. Pepe.
His head was so well stor'd a magazine, that nothing could be propos'd which he was not master of. Locke.
2. Of late this word has signified a miscellaneous pamphlet, from a periodical miscellany named the Gentleman's Magazine, by Edward Cave.
MAGE. n. f. [magus, Latin.] A magician. Spenser.
MAGGOT. n. f. [magrod, Welsh; millepeda, Latin; mađu, Saxon.]
1. A small grub, which turns into a fly.
Out of the fides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots. Ray on Creation.
From the fore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth's Dispens.
2. Whimsy; caprice; odd fancy.
Taffata phrases, filken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In rusted years, and honest kerfy noes. Shakespeare.
To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots, Hudibras, p. iii.
She pricked his maggot, and touched him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.
- MA'GGOTTINESS. n. f. [from maggoty.] The state of abounding with maggots.
- MA'GGOTTY. adv. [from maggoty.]
1. Full of maggots.
2. Capricious; whimsical.
To pretend to work out a neat scheme of thoughts with a maggoty unsettled head, is as ridiculous as to think to write trait in a jumbling coach. Norris's Miscel.
- MA'GICAL. n. f. [from magical.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.
I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shakespeare.
They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.
By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambrick, upon her head, the attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 110.
- MA'GICALLY. adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick.
- In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.
- MA'GICK. n. f. [magia, Latin.]
1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful; forcery; enchantment.
She once being loof,
The noble ruin of her magick, Antony, Claps on his sea-wing. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives. Rogers.
2. The secret operations of natural powers.
The writers of natural magick do attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse some immaterial virtue into the part fevered. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- MA'GICK. adj. Acting or doing by powers superior to the known power of nature; incantating; necromantick.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick lights
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake
Till all thy magick structures rear'd so high,
Were flatter'd into heaps. Milton.
Like cresses built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Graville.

- MAGICIAN. n. f. [magicus, Latin.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.
What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
Ald magician, that did keep
Th' Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lifts, makes calmest souls to grieve. Waller.
There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know; as, whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician, or a magician. Locke.
- MAGISTERIAL. adj. [from magister, Latin.]
1. Such as suits a master.
Such a frame of government is paternal, not magisterial. King Charles.
He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.
2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotic.
We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words, and magisterial looks, for current payment. L'Estrange.
Those men are but trapp'd who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South's Sermon.
3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistery.
Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew's Museum.
- MAGISTERIALLY. n. f. [from magisterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.
A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Over their pots and pipes, claiming and engrossing all these wholly to themselves; magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new modelling the world. South's Sermons.
- MAGISTERIALNESS. n. f. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.
Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.
- MAGISTERY. n. f. [magisterium, Latin.]
Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes refines and refinous substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptation is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.
Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, expelling it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be uncongealed in the centre. Brown.
The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.
- MA'GISTRACY. n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] Office or dignity of a magistrate.
You share the world, her magistracies, priesthoods, Wealth, and felicity, amongst you, friends. B. Johnson.
He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistracy, or undertaking the publick offices of state. Brown.
Some have disputed even against magistracy itself. Atterbury.
Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Clarissa.
- MA'GISTRALLY. adv. [magistrally, low Latin.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.
What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a license to controul so magistrally. Bishop Bramhall against Hobbes.
- MA'GISTRATE. n. f. [magistratus, Latin.] A man publicly invested with authority; a governor; an executor of the laws.
They chuse their magistrate!
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects. Drey of Pity.
- MAGNALITY. n. f. [magnalia, Latin.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.
Too greedy of magnalities, we make but favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- MAGNANIMITY. n. f. [magnanimitas, French; magnanimus, Latin.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul.
With deadly hue, an armed corse did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Fa. 2<sup>a</sup>. Let

- Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but indifferently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker, b. v.
They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears,
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient ransom was propos'd. Milton's Agonist.
Exploding many things under the name of trifles, is a very false proof either of wisdom or magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.
- MAGNANIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Latin.] Great of mind; elevated in sentiment; brave.
To give a kingdom hath been thought Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton's Par. Reg.
In strength
All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.
Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Confess.
- MAGNANIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.
A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milton on Education.
- MAGNET. n. f. [magnes, Latin.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron.
Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,
The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryden.
It may be reasonable to ask, whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.
- MAGNETICAL. adj. [from magnet.]
- MAGNETICK. adj. [from magnet.]
1. Relating to the magnet.
Review this whole magnetick scheme. Blackmore.
Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opt.
  2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.
The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton's Opt.
  3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.
The moon is magnetical of heat, as the fun is of cold and moisture. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Dante.
They, as they move towards his all-cheering lamp,
Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
  4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.
Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resolute breast,
As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Milton's Par. Reg.
  - MAGNETISM. n. f. [from magnet.] Power of the loadstone; power of attraction.
Many other magnetisms, and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
By the magnetism of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted. Glanville's Scep.
  - MAGNETIZABLE. adj. [from magnetize.] To be extolled or praised. Unusual.
Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnetizable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjectives from the multiplying conceits of men. Brown.
  - MAGNETICAL. adj. [magnetica, Latin.] Illustrious; grand; magnetick.
The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnetical of fame and glory throughout all countries. 1 Chron. xxii. 5.
  - Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers! If these magnetick titles yet remain, Not merely titular. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
O parent! these are thy magnetick deeds;
Thy trophies! Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
  - MAGNETICITY. n. f. [magnetiscentia, Lat.] Grandeur of appearance; splendour.
This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems, and gold,
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnetism. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
Not Babylon,

- MAGNIFICENT. adj. [magnificus, Latin.]
1. Grand in appearance; splendid; pompous.
Man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downwards. Locke.
Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry,
Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addison.- 2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to shew.
If he were magnificent, he spent much with an aspiring intent: if he spared, he heaped much with an aspiring intent. Sidney, b. ii.
- MAGNIFICENTLY. adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.
Beauty a monarch is,
Which kingly power magnificently proves,
By crowds of slaves and peopled empire's loves. Dryden.
We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handy-work. Grew's Confess.
- MA'GNIFICO. n. f. [Italian.] A grandee of Venice.
The duke himself, and the magnificos
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him. Shakespeare.
- MA'GNIFIER. n. f. [from magnify.]

The primitive magnifiers of this star were the Egyptians, who notwithstanding chiefly regarded it in relation to their river Nilus. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
- 2. A glass that encreases the bulk of any object.
To MA'GNIFY. v. a. [magnifico, Latin.]
1. To make great; to exaggerate; to amplify; to extol.
The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
- 2. To exalt; to elevate; to raise in estimation.
Greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant-angels: thee that day
Thy thunders magnify'd, but to create
Is greater than created to destroy. Milt. Par. Lost, b. viii.
- 3. To raise in pride or pretension.
He shall exalt and magnify himself above every god. Dan.
If ye will magnify yourselves against me, know now that God hath overthrown me. Jeb xix. 5.
He shall magnify himself in his heart. Dan. viii. 25.
- 4. To encrease the bulk of any object to the eye.
How these red globules would appear, if glasses could be found that could magnify them a thousand times more, is uncertain. Locke.
By true reflection I would see my face?
Why brings the fool a magnifying glass? Graville.
The greatest magnifying glasses in the world are a man's eyes, when they look upon his own person. Pepe.
As things seem large which we through mists descry, Dulness is ever apt to magnify. Pepe's Essay on Criticism.
- 5. A cant word for to have effect.
My governers assured my father I had wanted for nothing; that I was almost eaten up with the green-sickness: but this magnified but little with my father. Speccator, N<sup>o</sup>. 432.
- MA'GNITUDE. n. f. [magnitudo, Latin.]
1. Greatness; grandeur.
With plain heroic magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemn. Milt. Agonist.
- 2. Comparative bulk.
This tree hath no extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgment. K. Charles.
When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heav'n and earth confisting; and compute
Their magnitudes; this earth a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
Convince the world that you're devout and true;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden's Juv.
Conceive these particles of bodies to be so dispos'd amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be compos'd of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton's Opticks.

The whole maize plant has the appearance of a reed; the male flowers are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same plant, growing generally in a spike upon the top of the stalk; the female flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves, and are surrounded by three or four leaves, which closely adhere to the fruit until it is ripe: this plant is propagated in England only as a curiosity, but in America it is the principal support of the inhabitants, and consequently propagated with great care.
Maize affords a very strong nourishment, but more viscous than wheat. Arbutnot on Aliment.

To MAKE. v. a. [macan, Saxon; machen, German; maken, Dutch.]
1. To create.
Let us make man in our image. Gen. i. 26.
The Lord hath made all things for himself. Prov. xvi. 4.
Remember! thou
Thy making, while the maker gave thee being. Milton.
2. To form of materials.
He fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf. Exod. xxxii. 4.
God hath made of one blood all nations of men. Acts.
We have no other measure, save one of the moon, but are artificially made out of these by compounding or dividing them. Holler on Time.
3. To compose: as, materials or ingredients.
One of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more Than would make up his message. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The heav'n, the air, the earth, and boundless sea,
Make but one temple for the deity. Waller.
A pint of salt of tartar, exposed unto a moist air, will make far more liquor than the former measure will contain.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

4. To form by art what is not natural.
There lavish nature, in her best attire,
Pours forth sweet odours, and alluring figns;
And art with her contending, doth aspire
To excel the natural with made delights. Spenser.
5. To produce as the agent.
She may give so much credit to her own laws, as to make their sentence weightier than any bare and naked conceit to the contrary. Hooker, b. v.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me;
then let me be your jest. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Thine enemies make a tumult. Psal. lxxxiii. 2.
When their hearts were merry they said, Call for Sampson, that he may make us sport. Judg. xvi. 25.
Give unto Solomon a perfect heart to build the palace for the which I have made provision. 1 Chron. xxix. 19.
Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damsel is not dead.
He maketh intercession to God against Israel. Rom. xi. 2.
Thou hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, and hast made thee a name. Jer. xxxii. 20.
Should we then make mirth?
Joshua made peace, and made a league with them to let them live. Josh. ix. 15.

Both combine
To make their greatness by the fall of man, Dryden.
Egypt, mad with superstition grown,
Makes gods of monsters. Tate's Juvenal.
6. To produce as a cause.
Wealth maketh many friends; but the poor is separated from his neighbour. Prov. xix. 4.
A man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men. Prov. xviii. 16.
The child who is taught to believe any occurrence to be a good or evil omen, or any day of the week lucky, hath a wide inroad made upon the soundness of his understanding. Watts.
7. To do; to perform; to practise; to use.
Though the appear honest to me, yet in other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd contradiction made of her. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
She made haste, and let down her pitcher. Gen. xxiv. 46.
Thou hast made an atonement for it. Exod. xxix. 36.
I will judge his house for ever, because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not. 1 Sam. iii. 13.
We made prayer unto our God. Neh. iv. 9.
He shall make a speedy riddance of all in the land. Zeph.
It hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor. Rom. xv. 26.
Make full proof of thy ministry. 2 Tim. iv. 5.
The Venetians, provoked by the Turks with divers injuries, both by sea and land, resolved, without delay, to make war likewise upon him. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
Such music as before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung. Milton.
All the actions of his life were ripped up and surveyed, and all malicious glosses made upon all he had said, and all he had done. Clarendon.
Says Carnades, since neither you nor I love repetitions, I shall not now make any of what else was urged against Themistocles. Boyle.
The Phenicians made claim to this man as theirs, and attributed to him the invention of letters. Hale.
What hope, O Pantheus! whether can we run?
Where make a stand? and what may yet be done? Dryd.
While merchants make long voyages by sea
To get estates, he cuts a shorter way. Dryden's Juv.
To what end did Ulysses make that journey? Aeneas undertook it by the exprels commandment of his father's ghost.

Dryden's Dedication to the Aeneis
He that will make a good use of any part of his life, must allow a large portion of it to recreation. Locke.
Make some request, and I,
Whate'er it be, with that request comply. Addison.
Were it permitted, he should make the tour of the whole system of the sun. Arbutnot and Pope's Mari. Scrib.

8. To cause to have any quality.
I will make your cities waste. Levi. xxvi. 31.
Her husband hath utterly made them void on the day he heard them. Num. xxx. 12.
When he had made a convenient room, he set it in a wall, and made it fast with iron. Wisd. xiii. 15.
Jesus came into Cana, where he made the water wine. John iv. 46.
He was the more inflamed with the desire of battle with Waller, to make even all accounts. Clarendon, b. viii.
I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Permitted you to fight for this usurper;
All to make sure the vengeance of this day,
Which even this day has ruin'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
In respect of actions within the reach of such a power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedom to make him. Locke.

9. To bring into any state or condition.
I have made thee a god to Pharaoh. Exod. vii. 1.
Joseph made ready his chariot, and went up to meet Israel. Gen. xlv. 29.
Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Exod. ii.
Ye have troubled me to make me to sink among the inhabitants. Gen. xxxiv. 39.
He made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant. Phil. ii. 7.
He should be made manifest to Israel. John i. 31.
Though I be free from all men, yet have I made myself servant unto all, that I might gain the more. 1 Cor. ix. 19.
He hath made me a by-word of the people, and aforetime
I was as a tabret. Job xvii. 6.
Make ye him drunken; for he magnified himself against the Lord. Jer. xlviii. 26.
Joseph was not willing to make her a publick example. Matt. i. 19.

By the assistance of this faculty we have all those ideas in our understandings, which, though we do not actually contemplate, yet we can bring in light, and make appear again, and be the objects of our thoughts. Locke.
The Lacedaemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness by bringing a drunken man into their company, and shewing them what a beast he made of himself. Watts.
10. To form; to settle.
Those who are wise in courts
Make friendships with the ministers of state,
Nor seek the ruins of a wretched exile. Rowe.

11. To hold; to keep.
Deep in a cave the sybil maketh abode. Dryden.
12. To secure from distress; to establish in riches or happiness.
He hath given her his monumental ring, and thinks himself made in the unchange composition. Shakespeare.
This is the night,
That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shakespeare.
Each element his dread command obeys,
Who makes or ruins with a smile or frown,
Who as by one he did our nation raise,
So now he with another pulls us down. Dryden.

13. To suffer; to incur.
The loss was private that I made;
'Twas but myself I lost; I lost no legions. Dryden.
He accuseth Neptune unjustly, who makes shipwreck a second time. Bacon.

14. To commit.
She was in his company at Page's house, and what they made there I know not. Shakespeare.
I will neither plead my age nor sickness in excuse of the faults which I have made. Dryden.

15. To compel; to force; to constrain.
That the soul in a sleeping man should be this moment busy a thinking, and the next moment in a waking man not remember those thoughts, would need some better proof than bare assertion to make it be believed. Locke.
They should be made to rise at their early hour; but great care should be taken in waking them, that it be not done hastily. Locke.

16. To intend; to purpose to do.
He may ask this civil question, friend!
What dost thou make a shipboard? to what end? Dryden.
Gomez; what mak'st thou here with a whole brotherhood of city-bailiffs? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
17. To raise as profit from any thing.
He's in for a commodity of brown pepper; of which he made five marks ready money. Shakespeare.
Did

Did I make a gain of you by any of them I sent. 2. Car.
 If Auletes, who was a negligent prince, made so much, what must now the Romans make, who govern it so wisely.
Arbutnot on Coins.
 If it is meant, of the value of the purchase, it was very high; it being hardly possible to make so much of land, unless it was reckoned at a very low price. Arbutnot.
 18. To reach; to tend to; to arrive at.
Acofta recordeth, they that fall in the middle can make no land of either side.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
 I've made the port already.
 And laugh securely at the lazy storm.
Dryden.
 To nearest land, and make the Libyan shoars.
 Did I but purpose to embark with thee,
 While gentle zephyrs play in prosperous gales;
 But would forsake the ship, and make the shoar.
 When the winds whistle, and the tempests roar?
Prior.
 19. To gain.
 The wind came about, and settled in the west for many days, so as we could make little or no way.
Bacon.
 I have made way
 To some Philistian lords, with whom to treat.
Milton.
 Now mark a little why Virgil is so much concerned to make this marriage, it was to make way for the divorce which he intended afterwards.
Dryden's En.
 20. To force; to gain by force.
 Rugged rocks are interposed in vain;
 He makes his way o'er mountains, and contemns
 Unruly torrents, and unforded streams.
Dryden's Piv.
 The stone wall which divides China from Tartary, is reckoned nine hundred miles long, running over rocks, and making way for rivers through mighty arches.
Temple.
 21. To exhibit.
 When thou makest a dinner, call not thy friends but the poor.
Luke xiv. 12.
 22. To pay; to give.
 He shall make amends for the harm that he hath done.
Lev.
 23. To put; to place.
 You must make a great difference between Hercules's labours by land, and Jason's voyage by sea for the golden fleece.
Bacon's War with Spain.
 24. To turn to some use.
 Whate'er they catch,
 Their fury makes an instrument of war.
Dryden's En.
 25. To incline; to dispose.
 It is not requisite they should destroy our reason, that is, to make us rely on the strength of nature, when she is least able to relieve us.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.
 26. To prove as an argument.
 Seeing they judge this to make nothing in the world for them.
Hooker, b. ii.
 You conceive you have no more to do than, having found the principal word in a concordance, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn, though in reality it makes nothing for you.
Swift.
 27. To represent; to show.
 He is not that goode and ails that Valla would make him.
Baker's Reflections on Learning.
 28. To constitute.
 Our desires carry the mind out to absent good, according to the necessity which we think there is of it, to the making or encrease of our happiness.
Locke.
 29. To amount to.
 Whatsoever they were, it maketh no matter to me: God
 accepteth no man's person.
Gal. ii. 16.
 30. To mould; to form.
 Lye not erect but hollow, which is in the making of the bed; or with the legs gathered up, which is the more wholesome.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Some undeserved fault
 I'll find about the making of the bed.
Shakespeare.
 They mow fern green, and burning of them to ashes, make the ashes up into balls with a little water.
Mortimer.
 31. To make away. To kill; to destroy.
 He will not let slip any advantage to make away him whose just tide, enabled by courage and goodnefs, may one day shake the seat of a never-secure tyranny.
Sidney, b. ii.
 The duke of Clarence, lieutenant of Ireland, was, by practice of evil persons about the king his brother, called thence away, and soon after, by sinister means, was clean made away.
Spenser on Ireland.
 He may have a likely guess,
 How these were they that made away his brother.
Shakespeare.
 Trajan would say of the vain jealousy of princes that seek to make away those that aspire to their succession, that there was never king that did put to death his successor.
Bacon.
 My mother I flew at my very birth, and since have made away two of her brothers, and happily to make way for the purposes of others against myself.
Hayward.

Addison.
 32. To make away. To transfer.
 Debtors,
 When they never meant to pay,
 To some friend make all away.
Walter.
 33. To make account. To reckon; to believe.
 They made no account but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas.
Bacon's War with Spain.
 34. To make account of. To esteem; to regard.
 The same who have made free with the greatest names in church and state, and exposed to the world the private mil-fortunes of families.
Daniel.
 35. To make free with. To treat without ceremony.
 The grand master, guarded with a company of most valiant knights, drove them out again by force, and made good the place.
Kneller's Hist. of the Turk.
 When he comes to make good his confident undertaking, he is fain to say things that agree very little with one another.
Boyle.
 I'll either die, or I'll make good the place.
Dryden.
 As for this other argument, that by pursuing one single theme they gain an advantage to express, and work up, the passions, I with any example he could bring from them could make it good.
Dryden on dramatick Poesy.
 I will add what the same author subjoins to make good his foregoing remark.
Locke on Education.
 36. To make good. To fulfil; to accomplish.
 This letter doth make good the friar's words.
Shakespeare.
 37. To make light of. To consider as of no consequence.
 They made light of it, and went their ways.
Matt. xxii. 5.
 38. To make live. To court; to play the gallant.
 How happy each of the sexes would be, if there was a window in the breast of every one that makes or receives love.
Addison's Guardian, N. 106.
 39. To make merry. To feast; to partake of an entertainment.
 A hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?
Shakespeare.
 The king, to make demonstration to the world, that his proceedings against Sir William Stanley, imposed upon him by necessity of state, had not diminished the affection he bore to his brother, went to Latham, to make merry with his mother and the earl.
Bacon's Henry VIII.
 A gentleman and his wife will ride to make merry with his neighbour, and after a day those two go to a third; in which progress they encrease like snowballs, till through their burthen some weight they break.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
 40. To make much of. To cherish; to foster.
 The king hearing of their adventure, suddenly falls to take pride in making much of them, extolling them with infinite praises.
Sidney, b. ii.
 The bird is dead
 That we have made much of!
Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
 It is good discretion not to make too much of any man at the first.
Bacon's Essay.
 The easy and the lazy make much of the gout; and yet making much of themselves too, they take care to carry it presently to bed, and keep it warm.
Temple.
 41. To make of. What to make of, is, how to understand.
 That they should have knowledge of the languages and affairs of those that lie at such a distance from them, was a thing we could not tell what to make of.
Bacon.
 I past the summer here at Nimmequen, without the least remembrance of what had happened to me in the spring, till about the end of September, and then I began to feel a pain
 I knew not what to make of, in the same joint of my other foot.
Temple.
 There is another statue in bras of Apollo, with a modern inscription on the pedestal, which I know not what to make

Addison on Italy.
 I desired he would let me see his book: he did so, smiling: I could not make any thing of it.
Talier.
 Upon one side of the pillar were huge pieces of iron tickling out, cut into strange figures, which we knew not what to make of.
Gulliver's Travels.
 42. To make of. To produce from; to effect.
 I am astonished, that those who have appeared against this paper have made so very little of it.
Addison.
 43. To make of. To consider; to account; to esteem.
 Makes me no more of me than of a slave?
Dryden.
 44. To make of. To cherish; to foster.
 Xaycus was wonderfully beloved, and made of, by the Turkish merchants, whose language he had learned.
Kneller.
 45. To make over. To settle in the hands of trustees.
 Widows, who have tried one lover,
 Trust none again till they have made over.
Hudibras, p. iii.

Tillotson's Sermons.
 Scalliger hath made out, that the history of Troy was no more the invention of Homer than of Virgil.
Dryden.
 In the passages from our own divines, most of the reasonings which make out both my propositions are already suggested.
Atterbury's Sermons.
 I dare engage to make it out, that, instead of contributing equal to the landed men, they will have their full principal and interest at six per Cent.
Swift's Miscel.
 50. To make sure of. To consider as certain.
 They made as sure of health and life, as if both of them were at their disposal.
Dryden.
 51. To make sure of. To secure to one's possession.
 But whether marriage bring joy or sorrow,
 Make sure of this day, and hang to-morrow.
Dryden.
 52. To make up. To get together.
 How will the farmer be able to make up his rent at quarter-day?
Locke.
 53. To make up. To reconcile; to repair.
 This kind of comprehension in scripture being therefore received, still there is no doubt how far we are to proceed by collection before the full and complete measure of things necessary be made up.
Hooker, b. i.
 I knew when seven justices could not make up a quarrel.
Shakespeare's As you like it.
 54. To make up. To repair.
 I sought for a man among them that should make up the Poor Cupid fobbing scarce could speak;

Indeed, mamma, I did not know ye:
Alas! how easy my mistake!
I took you for your likeness Cloe. Prior.

Little masters and misters are great impediments to servants;
the remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales to papa and mamma. Swift's Rules to Servants.

MAMME'E tree. n. f.
The mammee tree hath a roseaceous flower, which consists of several leaves placed in a circular order, from whose cup arises the point, which afterwards becomes an almost spherical fleshy fruit, containing two or three seeds inclosed in hard rough shells.

MA'MMET. n. f. [from man or mamma.] A puppet, a figure dressed up.

Kate; this is no world
To play with mammets, and to tilt with lips. Shakespeare.

- Let her at least the vocal brafs inspire,
And tell the nations in no vulgar strain,
What wars I manage, and what wreaths I gain. Prior.
2. To train a horse to graceful action.
He rode up and down gallantly mounted, managing his horse, and charging and discharging his lance. Kneller.
3. To govern; to make tractable.
They vault from hunters to the manag'd reed. Young.
- Let us stick to our point, and we will manage Bull I'll warrant you. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
4. To wield; to move or use easily.
Long tubes are cumbersome, and scarce to be easily managed. Newton.
5. To husband; to make the object of caution.
There is no more to manage! If I fall,
It shall be like myself; a setting sun
Should leave a track of glory in the skies. Dryden.
- The less he had to lose, the less he car'd,
To manage loathsome life, when love was the reward. Dryden.
6. To treat with caution or decency: this is a phrase merely Gallick; not to be imitated.
Notwithstanding it was so much his interest to manage his protestant subjects in the country; he made over his principality to France. Addison on Italy.
- To MANAGE, v. n. To superintend affairs; to transact.
Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant
What their unerring wisdom fees thee want. Dryden.
- MANAGE*, v. a. [manège, manage, French.]
1. Conduct; administration.

To him him put
This might have been prevented,
With very easy arguments of love,
Which now the manages of two kingdoms must
With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shaksp. K. John.

For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
Ere further leisure yield them further means. Shaksp. Henry.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet.

The plea of a good intention will serve to sanctify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South's Sermons.

Whenever we take a strong bias, it is not out of a moral incapacity to do better, but for want of a careful manage and discipline to set us right at first. L'Estrange's Fables.

2. Use; instrumentality.

To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped for; quicksilver will not endure the manage of the fire. Bacon.

3. Government of a horse.

In thy slumbers
I heard thee murmur tales of iron wars, Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed. Shaksp. Henry.

The horse you must draw in his career with his manage and turn, doing the curveto. Peacock.

MANAGEABLE, adj. [from manage.]

1. Easy in the use; not difficult to be wielded or moved.

The conditions of weapons and their improvement are, that they may serve in all weathers; and that the carriage may be light and manageable. Bacon's Essays.

Very long tubes are, by reason of their length, apt to bend, and shake by bending so as to cause a continual trembling in the objects, whereas by contrivance the glasses are readily manageable. Newton's Opticks.

2. Governable; tractable.

MANAGEABLENESS, n. f. [from manageable.]

1. Accommodation to easy use.

This disagreement may be imputed to the greater or less exactness or manageableness of the instruments employed. Boyle.

2. Tractableness; easiness to be governed.

MANAGEMENT, n. f. [management, French.]

1. Conduct; administration.

Mark with what management their tribes divide;
Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.

An ill argument introduced with deference, will procure more credit than the profoundest science with a rough, insolent, and noisy management. Lacke on Education.

The wrong management of the earl of Godolphin was the only cause of the union. Swift's Miscel.

2. Practice; transaction; dealing.

He had great managements with ecclesiastics in the view of being advanced to the pontificate. Addison on Italy.

MANAGER, n. f. [from manage.]

1. One who has the conduct or direction of any thing.

A skilful manager of the rabble, so long as they have but ears to hear, needs never enquire whether they have any understanding. South's Sermons.

MAN

The manager opens his sluice every night, and distributes the water into the town. Addison.

An artful manager, that crept between His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen. Pope.

2. A man of frugality; a good husband.
A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main, a manager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit. Temple's Miscel.

The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

MANAGERY, n. f. [managery, French.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.

They who most exactly describe that bard, give to fill an account of any conduct or discretion in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon, b. viii.

2. Husbandry; frugality.

The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Decay of Pity.

3. Manner of using.

No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloodless skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Decay of Pity.

MANA'TION, n. f. [manatis, Latin.] The act of illusing from something else.

MANCHE, n. f. [French.] A sleeve.

MANCHET, n. f. [manchet, French. Stimmet.] A small loaf of fine bread.

Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds.

I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. More's Dial.

MANCHINE'EL tree, n. f. [manacilla, Latin.]

The manchineel tree has male flowers, or katkins, which are produced at remote distances from embryos, which become round fleshy fruit, in which is contained a rough woody nut, inclosing four or five flat seeds: it is a native of the West Indies, and grows equal to the size of an oak: its wood, which is sown out into planks, and brought to England, is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed in cabinet-makers work: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark, which is of a milky colour, must be burnt out before the work is begun; for its nature is so corrosive, that it will raise blisters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should happen to lie into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippen, by which many Europeans have been deceived; some of whom have greatly suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it, which will corrode the mouth and throat: the leaves of these trees also abound with a milky juice of the same nature, so that the cattle never shelter themselves under them, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet the goats eat this fruit without any injury. Miller.

To MANCIPATE, v. a. [mancipio, Latin.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less manicipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MANCIPATION, n. f. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.

MANCIPLE, n. f. [mancept, Latin.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.

Their manciple fell dangerously ill,
Bread must be had, their gift went to the mill:
This simkin moderately stole before,
Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more. Betterton's Miller of Trampington.

MANDAMUS, n. f. [Latin.] A writ granted by the king, so called from the initial word.

MANDARIN, n. f. A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.

MANDATARY, n. f. [mandataire, Fr. from mandat, Latin.] He to whom the pope has, by virtue of his prerogative, and his own proper right, given a mandate for his benefice. Ayliffe's Paragon.

MANDATE, n. f. [mandatum, Latin.]

1. Command.

Her force is not any where so apparent as in express mandates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hooker, b. i.

The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. Precept; charge; commission, sent or transmitted.

Who

MAN

Who knows,
If the scarce bearded Cesar have not sent His powerful mandate to you. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

This Moor,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought. Shaksp. Othello.

He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryden.

This dream all powerful Juno sends, I bear
Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear:
Haste, arm your Ardians. Dryden's Ev.

MANDATOR, n. f. [Latin.] Director.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor. Ayliffe's Paragon.

MANDATORY, adj. [mandare, Latin.] Preceptive; directory.

MANDIBLE, n. f. [mandibula, Latin.] The jaw; the instrument of mastication.

He faith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Grew's Museum.

MANDIBULAR, n. f. [from mandibula, Latin.] Belonging to the jaw.

MANDILION, n. f. [mandilion, Italian.] A soldier's coat.

MANDREL, n. f. [mandrin, French.]

Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work, that is to be turned; this mandrel is called a shank, or pin-mandrel; and if the hole the shank is to fit into be very small, and the work to be fattened on it pretty heavy, then turners fasten a round iron shank or pin, and fasten their work upon it.

MANDRAGE, n. f. [mandragora, Lat. mandragore, Fr.]

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top into several parts; the point afterwards becomes a globular soft fruit, in which are contained many kidney-shaped seeds: the roots of this plant is said to bear a resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporific quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotic of the most powerful kind. Hill's Mat. Med.

Would curst as, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching teins,
As curst as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shaksp. Henry.

Not pappy, nor mandragoras,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cline thee to that sweet sleep. Shaksp. Henry.

And shrieks like mandrakes, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad. Shaksp. Henry.

Give me of thy sons mandrakes. Gen. xxx. 14.

Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root. Doine.

To MAN'DUCATE, v. a. [manducare, Lat.] To chew; to eat.

MANDUCATION, n. f. [manducatio, Latin.] Eating.

Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach.

As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore to mull the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh.

MANE, n. f. [maene, Dutch.] The hair which hangs down on the neck of horses, or other animals.

Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney, b. ii.

A currie comb, mane comb, and whip for a jade. Tusser.

The weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light-fire. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

A lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows. Waller.

For quitting both their swords and reins,
They grasp'd with all their strength the manes. Hudibras.

MAN'EATER, n. f. [man and eat.] A cannibal; an anthropophagite; one that feeds upon human flesh.

MAN'ED, adj. [from the noun.] Having a mane.

MANES, n. f. [Latin.] Ghost; shade; that which remains of man after death.

Hail, O ye holy manes! hail again
Paternal ashes. Dryden's Virg.

MANFUL, adj. [man and full.] Bold; stout; daring.

It had devour'd 'twas so manful. Hudibras.

MANFULLY, adv. [from manful.] Boldly; stoutly.

MAN

Artimisia behaved herself manfully in a great fight 'at sea, when Xerxes stood by as a coward. Abbot.

I slew him manfully in fight. Shaksp. Henry.

Without false vantage, or base treachery.
He that with this Christian armour manfully fights against, and repels, the temptations and assaults of his spiritual enemies; he that keeps his conscience void of offence, shall enjoy peace here, and for ever. Ray on Creation.

MANFULNESS, n. f. [from manful.] Stoutness; boldness.

MANGCO'RN, n. f. [mengen, Dutch, to mingle.] Corn of several kinds mixed: as, wheat and rye.

MAN'GANESE, n. f. [manganese, low Latin.]

Manganese is extremely well known by name, though the glassmen use it for many different substances, that have the same effect in clearing the foul colour of their glass: it is properly an iron ore of a poorer sort; the most perfect sort is of a dark iron grey, very heavy but brittle. Hill.

Manganese is rarely found but in an iron vein. Woodward.

MANGE, n. f. [de mangaison, French.] The itch or scab in cattle.

The sheep died of the rot, and the swine of the mange. Benj. Johnson.

Tell what crisis does divine
The rot in sheep, or mange in swine. Hudibras, p. i.

MAN'GER, n. f. [mangeire, French.] The place or vessel in which animals are fed with corn.

She brought forth her first-born son, and laid him in a manger. Luke ii. 7.

A churlish cur got into a manger, and there lay growling to keep the horses from their provender. L'Estrange's Fables.

MAN'GINESS, n. f. [from mange.] Scabbiness; infection with the mange.

To MAN'GLE, v. a. [mangle, Dutch, to be wanting; man-cus, Latin.] To lacerate; to cut or tear piece-meal; to butcher.

Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that thus have mangled you? Shaksp. Henry.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp. Henry.

Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exacerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton's Agonistes.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, forgot his mangled meat. Dryden.

What could swords or poison, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame!
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read or understand her own natural tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are disposed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift to a young Lady.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, only to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see now-a-days, are full of those manplings and abbreviations. Swift's Let. to the Ld. Treasurer.

Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and distorting authors. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

MAN'GLER, n. f. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,

He moves with manly grace. Dryden's En.
MAN'LY. adv. [from man.] With courage like a man.

MAN'NA. n. f.
Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres more or less to the fingers in handling; its colour is whitish, yellowish, or brownish, and it has in taste the sweetness of sugar, and with it a sharpness that renders it very agreeable:
we are supplied with manna from Calabria and Sicily, which is the product of two different trees, but which are of the same genus, being both varieties of the ash: when the heats of summer are free from rain, the leaves, the trunks, and branches of both these trees, exude a white honey juice, which concretes into what we call manna, forming itself as it runs, and according to its different quantity, into small roundish drops, or long flakes: what flows out of the leaves of these trees is all natural, but the Italian procure a forced kind of manna by wounding the trunks and branches: the finest manna of all is that which oozes naturally out of the leaves in August, after the season of collecting the common manna is over: the French have another sort of manna, produced from the

MAN

the larch tree, of a very different genus of the ash, and the very tree which produces oil of turpentine; this is called Briançon manna, from the country where it is produced: our black thorn, or sloe tree, sometimes yield a true manna from the ribs of the leaves in Autumn; but it is in a very small quantity: there is another sort called the manna Persica, produced from a small prickly shrub about four or five feet high, growing in Egypt, Armenia, Georgia, and Persia. The Hebrews, who had been acquainted with the last mentioned sort of manna, when they found a miraculous food in the desert resembling it, did not scruple to call it manna: this was a conjecture the more natural to them, as they saw plainly that this descended from the heavens in form of a dew, and concreted into the globules in which they found it; and the received opinion at that time was; that the Oriental manna was formed in the same manner; that it was a dew from the clouds concreted on the plants, none supposing, in those early times, that it was the natural juice of the shrub upon which it was found: it is however evident, that this was not of the nature of manna, because it melted away as the sun grew hot, whereas manna hardens in that heat. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aerial produce, by an experiment being made by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it afterwards as on those which were open to the air and dew. Manna is celebrated, both by the ancients and moderns, as a gentle and mild cathartic. Hill.
It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Locke.

MAN

We bring our manners to the blest abodes;
And think what pleases us must please the gods. Dryden.
10. [In the plural.] Ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.
The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urge. Shakespeare's King Lear.
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,
That so neglected you. Shakespeare's Othello.
Our griefs and not our manners reason now. Shakespeare's Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves;
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Shakespeare's Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Good manners bound her to invite
The stranger dame to be her guest that night. Dryden.
None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man: and shall we, in our applications to the great God, take that to be religion, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be man- ners? South's Sermons.

Your passion bends
Its force against your nearest friends;
Which manners, decency, and pride,
Have taught you from the world to hide. Swift.
MAN'NERLINESS. n. f. [from mannerly.] Civility; ceremonious complaisance.
Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal soul of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe. Hall's Origin of Mankind.
MAN'NERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.
Tut, tut; here is a mannerly forbearance. Shakespeare

MAN

Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For this great journey. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
MANQUILLER. n. f. [man and cspellan, Saxon.] A murderer;
a mauler; a mauler.

This was not Kayne the manqueller, but one of a gentler spirit and milder sex, to wit, a woman. Carew.
MANSE. n. f. [manis, Latin.] A parsonage house.
MANSTON. n. f. [manis, Latin.] A parsonage house.

1. Place of residence; abode; house.

All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being descended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a manison. Sidney.

A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his manison-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His manison, and his titles in a place,
From whence himself does fly? he loves us not. Shakespeare.

Thy manison wants thee, Adam, rise
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! call'd by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd. Milton.

A manison is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy heav'n's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.

2. Residence; abode.

These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their manisons keep. Denham.

MANSU'GHTER. n. f. [man and slaughter.]

1. Murder; destruction of the human species.

The whole pleasure of that book sheweth in open man- slaughter and bold bawdry. Afham's Schoolmaster.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils, with infinite
Man slaughter, shall be held the highest pitch
Of human glory. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

2. [In law.] The act of killing a man not wholly without fault, though without malice.

MANS'LA'YER. n. f. [man and slay.] Murderer; one that has killed another.

Cities for refuge for the man slayer. Num. xxxv. 6.

MANSU'ETE. adj. [mansuetus, Lat.] Tame; gentle; not ferocious; not wild.

This holds not only in domestick and manfeste birds; for then it might be thought the effect of curation or institution, but also in the wild. Roy on Creation.

MAN'SUETUDE. n. f. [mansuetudo, French; mansuetudo, Lat.]
Tameless; gentleness.

The angry lion did present his paw,
Which by consent was given to mansuetude;

The fearful hare her ears, which by their law
Humility did reach to fortitude. Herbert.

MANTEL. n. f. [mantel, old Fr.] Work raised before a chimney to conceal it, whence the name, which originally signifies a cloak.

From the Italians we may learn how to raise fair mantels within the rooms, and how to disguise the shafts of chimnies. Wotton's Architecture.

If you break any china on the manteltree or cabinet, gather up the fragments. Swift.

MANTELET. n. f. [manlelet, French.]

1. A small cloak worn by women.

2. [In fortification.] A kind of moveable penthouse, made of pieces of timber sawed into planks, which being about three inches thick, are nailed one over another to the height of almost six feet: they are generally cased with tin, and set upon little wheels; so that in a siege they may be driven before the pioneers, and serve as blinds to shelter them from the enemy's small-shot: there are other mantellets covered on the top, whereof the miners make use to approach the walls of a town or castle. Harris.

MANTIGER. n. f. [man and tiger.] A large monkey or baboon.

Near these was placed, by the black prince of Monomotapa's side, the glaring cat-a-mountain, and the man-micking mantiger. Arbuth. and Pope.

MAN'TLE. n. f. [mantell, Welsh.] A kind of cloak or garment thrown over the rest of the dress.

We, well-cover'd with the night's black mantle,
At unawares may beat down Edward's guard,
And seize himself. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Poor Tom drinks the green mantle of the standing pool.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

The day begins to break, and night is fled, Shakespeare.

Whole pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.

Their actions were covered and disguised with mantles, very usual in times of disorder, of religion and justice.

The herald and children are clothed with mantles of water green fatten; but the herald's mantle is streamed with gold. Bacon's New Atlantis.

MAN

Before the fun,
Of God, as with a mantle, didst invest
The rising world of waters dark and deep,
Won from the void and formless infinite.

By which the beauty of the earth appears,
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears.

Upon loosening of his mantle the eggs fell from him at unawares, and the eagle was a third time defeated. L'Estrange.

Dan Pope for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A filken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless. Prior.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set the unhappy Phæton to view;
The flaming chariot and the steeds it flew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd. Addison.

To MA'NTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloke, to cover;
to disguise.

As the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness; so their rising senses
Begin to chace the ignorant fumes, that mantle
Their clearer reason. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I left them
I th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to th' chins. Shakespeare's Tempest.

To MA'NTLE. v. n. [The original of the signification of this word is not plain. Skinner considers it as relative to the expansion of a mantle: as, the hawk mantleth; the spreads her wings like a mantle.]

1. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.

2. To joy; to revel.

My frail fancy fed with full delight
Doth bathe in bliss, and mantleth most at ease;
Ne thinks of other heaven, but how it might
Her heart's desire with most contentment please. Spenser.

3. To be expanded; to spread luxuriantly.

The pair that clad
Each shoulder broad, came mantling o'er his breast
With regal ornament. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.

The mantling vine
Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps Luxuriant. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
That crawls along the side of yon small hill,
Plucking ripe clusters. Milton.

You'll sometimes meet a fop, of nicest tread,
Whose mantling peruke veils his empty head. Gay.

He with the Nais went to dwell,
Leaving the nectar'd feasts of Jove;
And where his mazy waters flow,
He gave the mantling vine, to grow
A trophy to his love. Fenton's Ode to Lord Gower.

4. To gather any thing on the surface; to froth.

There are a sort of men, whose villages
Do cream and mantle like a staid pond;
And do a wilful stillness entertain.
With purpose to be drest in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit.
It drinketh fresh, flowereth, and mantleth exceedingly. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 46.

From plate to plate your eye-balls roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope's Horat.

5. To ferment; to be in sprightly agitation.

Flow'd in his lovely cheeks; when his bright eyes
Spark'd with youthful fires; when ev'ry grace Shone in the father, which now crowns the son. Smith.

MA'NTUA. n. f. [this is perhaps corrupted from mantua, Fr.]

A lady's gown.

Not Cynthia, when her mantua's pinn'd awry,
E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad virgin! for thy ravish'd hair. Pope.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, ruffles, and *mantua*s. Swift.

MA'NTUAMAKER. n. f. [mantua and maker.] One who makes gowns for women.

By profession a mantuamaker: I am employed by the most fashionable ladies. Addison's Guardian.

MANUAL. adj. [manuialis, Latin; manuel, French.]

1. Performed by the hand.

The speculative part of painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to that perfection which is its object. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

2. Used

2. Used by the hand.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration under his majesty's sign manual.

MANUAL. n. f. A small book, such as may be carried in the hand.

This manual of laws, filed the confessor's laws, contains but few heads. Hale's Common Law of England.

In those prayers which are recommended to the use of the devout persons of your church, in the manuals and offices have nothing they thought scandalous. Stillfleet.

MANU'BIAL. adj. [manubialis, Lat.] Belonging to spoil; taken in war. Dict.

MANU'BRUM. n. f. [Latin.] A handle.

Though the ficker move easily enough up and down in the cylinder by the help of the manubrium, yet if the manu- brum be taken off, it will require a considerable strength to move it. Boyle.

MANUDUCTION. n. f. [manuductio, Latin.] Guidance by the hand.

We find no open track, or constant manuduction, in this labyrinth. Preface to Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident from the constant steadiness and regularity of their motion. Glaville.

This is a direct manuduction to all kind of sin, by abusing the conscience with undervaluing persuasions concerning the malignity and guilt even of the foulest. South's Sermon.

MANUFACTURE. n. f. [manus and facio, Latin; manufacture, French.]

1. The practice of making any piece of workmanship.

2. Any thing made by art.

Heav'n's pow'r is infinite: earth, air, and sea,
The manufacture mads the making pow'r obey. Dryden.

The peasants are clothed in a coarse kind of canvas, the manufacture of the country. Addison on Italy.

To MANUFA'CTURE. v. a. [manufacture, French.] To make by art and labour; to form by workmanship.

MANUFA'CTURER. n. f. [manufacturier, French; manufactur, Lat.] A workman; an artificer.

In the practices of artificers and the manufacturers of various kinds, the end being proposed, we find out ways of composing things for the several uses of human life. Watts.

To MANUMIT. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To set free; to dismiss from slavery.

A constant report of a danger so eminent run through the whole castle, even into the deep dungeons, by the compassion of certain manumitted slaves. Koelle's Hist. of the Turks.

He pretexts
To thee renown'd for piety and force,
Poor captives manumitted, and matchless horse. Waller.

MANUMISSION. n. f. [manumissio, Fr. manumissio, Lat.] The act of giving liberty to slaves.

Slaves wore iron rings until their manumission or preferment. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

The pileus was somewhat like a night-cap, as the symbol of liberty, and therefore given to slaves at their manumission.

MANUMIT. v. a. [manumitto, Latin.] To set free; to dismiss from slavery.

Help to manumit and release him from those servile drudge-ries to vice, under which those remain who live without God. Government of the Tongue.

Thou wilt beneath the burthen bow,
And glad receive the manumitting blow
On thy shav'd slavish head. Dryden's Juvenal.

MANURABLE. adj. [from manure.] Capable of cultivation.

This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every maior. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MANURANCE. n. f. [from manure.] Agriculture; cultivation.

An obsolete word, worthy of revival.

Although there should none of them fall by the sword, yet they being kept from manurance, and their cattle from running abroad, by this hard restraint they would quickly devour one another. Spenser on Ireland.

To MANU'RE. v. a. [manuwerer, French.]

1. To cultivate by manual labour.

They mock our scant manuring, and require More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth. Milt.

2. To dung; to fatten with composts.

Fragments of shells, reduced by the agitation of the sea to powder, are used for the manuring of land. Woodward.

Or share their fate: the corps of half her fenate Manure the fields of Thebais, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates. Addison's Cato.

MANU'RE. n. f. [from the verb.] Soil to be laid on lands;
dung or compost to fatten land.

When the Nile from Pharian fields is fed,
The fat manure with heav'nly fire is warm'd. Dryden.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

MANUREMENT. n. f. [from manure.] Cultivation; improvement.

The manurement of wits is like that of soils, where before the pains of tilling or sowing, men consider what the mould will bear. Wotton on Education.

MANURER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who manures land; a husbandman.

MANUSCRIPT. n. f. [manuscrit, Fr. manuscriptum, Latin.] A book written, not printed.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Ara-bick, and fought in the most remote parts by the diligence of Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, were upon sale to the jesuits. Wotton.

Her majesty has perused the manuscript of this opera, and given it her approbation. Dryden's Dedication to K. Arthur.

MAN'Y. adj. comp. more, superl. most. [mæny, Saxon.]

1. Consisting of a great number; numerous; more than few.

Our enemy, and the destroyers of our country, flew many of us. Jude, xvi. 24.

When many atoms descend in the air, the same cause which makes them be many, makes them be light in proportion to their multitude. Di-gby on the Soul.

The apostles never give the least directions to Christians to appeal to the bishop of Rome for a determination of the many differences which, in those times, happened among them. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Marking number indefinite.

Both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, brought bracelets. Exod. xxxv. 22.

Heard together in rude rabblement. Fairy Queen.

O thou fond many! with what loud applause
Did'st thou beat heav'n with blessing Bolingbroke. Shakespeare.

I had a purpose now
To lead our many to the holy land;
Left rest and lying still might make them look Too near into my state. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

A care-craz'd mother of a many children. Shakespeare.

The vulgar and the many are fit only to be led or driven, but by no means fit to guide themselves. South's Sermons.

There parting from the king the chiefs divide,
And wheeling East and West, before their many ride. Dryden.

He is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment of his life. Tillotson's Sermons.

Seeing a great many in rich gowns, he was amazed to find that persons of quality were up to early. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Many, when it is used before a singular noun, seems to be a substantive.

Thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake have I shed many a tear. Shakespeare.

He is best with enemies, the meanest of which is not without many and many a way to the wreaking of a malice.

L'Estrange's Fables.

Broad were their collars too, and every one
Was set about with many a costly stone. Dryden.

He from the manypeopl'd city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the drivers cries. Sandys.
MANYTIMES, an adverbial phrase. Often; frequently.
They are Roman catholic in the device and legend, which are both of them manytimes taken out of the scriptures.

MAP. n. f. [mappe, low Latin.] A geographical picture on which lands and seas are delineated according to the longitude and latitude.

Zeliane earnestly entreated Dorus, that he would bestow a map of his little world upon her, that she might see whether it were troubled with such uninhabitable climes of cold depairs, and hot rages, as her's was. Sidney.
I will take the map of Ireland, and lay it before me, and make mine eyes my schoolmasters, to give my understanding to judge of your plot. Spenser on Ireland.

Old coins are like so many maps for explaining the ancient geography.
O'er the map my finger taught to stray,
Cross many a region marks the winding way;
From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a mere geographer by love. Tickell.

To MAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To delineate; to set down.
I am near to the place where they should meet, if Pitano have map'd it right. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

MAPLE tree. n. f.
The maple tree hath jagged or angular leaves; the seeds grow two together in hard-winged vessels: there are several species, of which the greater maple is fallily called the sycamore tree: the common maple is a tree frequent in hedges-rows. Miller.

The carver holme, the mapple feldom inward found. Spens.
Of the rottenest mapple wood burnt to ashes they make a strong lye. Mortimer's Husbandry.

MAPPERY. n. f. [from map.] The art of planning and designing.

The still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike
When fitness calls them on;
They call this bedwork, mapp'ry, closet war. Shakespeare.

To MAR. v. a. [amaryn, Saxon.] To injure; to spoil; to hurt; to mischief; to damage. Obsolete.
Lofs is no shame, nor to be less than foe,
But to be less than himself, doth mar
Both looser's lot, and victor's praise also. Fairy Queen.

The master may here only stumble, and perchance fall in teaching, to the marring and maiming of the scholar in learning. Achan's Schoolmaster.

When priests are more in words than matter,
When brewers mark their malt with water. Shakespeare.
I pray you mar no more trees with writing songs in their barks.

I pray you mar no more of my verses with reading them ill-favour'dly. Shakespeare's As you like it.
Beware thine honour, be not then disgrac'd,
Take care thou mar not when thou think'st to mend. Fairf.

Aumrie became the man that all did mar,
Whether through indifference, chance, or worse. Daniel.
The ambition to prevail in great things is less harmful than that other, to appear in every thing; for that breeds confusion, and marring business, when great in dependencies. Bacon's Essays.

O! could we see how cause from cause doth spring!
How mutually they link'd and folded are:
And hear how oft one disagreeing string
The harmony doth rather make than mar! Davies.

Ire, envy, and despair,
Mar'd all his borrow'd visage, and betray'd Him counterfeit. Milton's Par. Lost.

Had he been there, untimely joy through all Mens hearts diffus'd, had mar'd the funeral. Waller.
Mother!

'Tis much unsafe my fire to disobey;
Not only you provoke him to your cost,
But with this mar'd, and the good cheer is lost. Dryden.
MAR'NATHA. n. f. [Syniack.] It signifies, the Lord comes, or, the Lord is come: it was a form of the denouncing or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces, If any love not the Lord Jesus Christ, let him be anathema maranatha, which is as much as to say, May'st thou be devoted to the greatest of evils; and to the utmost severity of God's judgments; may the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of thy crimes. Calmer.

MARAS'MUS. n. f. [μαρασμός, from μαρῆναι.] A consumption, in which persons waste much of their substance.
Pining atrophy, Quincy.

Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence. Milt. Par. Lost.
A marasmus imports a consumption following a fever; a consumption or withering of the body, by reason of a natural extinction of the native heat, and an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat. Harvey.

MARBLE. n. f. [marbre, French; marmor, Latin.]
1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.
He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock.
Thou marble hew'd, ere long to part with breath;
And houl'st rear'd, un mindful of thy death. Shakef.
Some dry their corn infected with the brine,
Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine. Dryden.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble. Locke.

2. Little balls of marble with which children play.
Marbles taught him percussion, and the laws of motion;
nut-crackers the use of the lever. Arbutnot and Pope.
3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription; as, the Oxford marbles.

MARBLE. adj.
1. Made of marble.
Pygmalion's fate revert it mine;
His marble love took flesh and blood,
'All that I worshipp'd as divine,
That beauty, now 'tis understood,
Appears to have no more of life,
Than that whereof he fram'd his wife. Waller.

2. Variegated, or red like marble.
Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the pureness of my virgin-mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word. Sidney, b. ii.

The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover. Swift.

To MARBLE. v. a. [marbrer, French, from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.
A sheet of very well sleeked marble'd paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion. Boyle on Colours.

Marbled with sage the hard'ning cheese the press'd,
And yellow butter Marian's skill profess'd. Gay's Pastoral.

MARBLEHEARTED. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; unfeeling; hard-hearted.
Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child;
Than the sea monster. Shakespeare's King Lear.

MARCASITE. n. f.
The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, of an obscurely and irregularly foliaceous fracture, of a bright glittering appearance, and naturally found in continued beds among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless: as it is generally found among the ores of metals, it is frequently impregnated with particles of them, and of other fossil bodies, and thence assumes various colours and degrees of hardness. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more so in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it, besides which it contains a quantity of arsenick. Hill.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures. Woodward Met. Fossils.

The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, or metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals. Newton's Opticks.

Here marcasites in various figures wait,
To ripen to a true metallic state. Garth's Dispensatory.
MARCH. n. f. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.
March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to show this month was dedicated to Mars. Peacocks on Drawing.

To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, French; for marchare, Menage, from Mars, Junius.]
1. To move in military form.
Well march we on;
To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd. Shakespeare.

He march'd in battle array with his power against Art-phaxad. Psalm i. 13.
Macabees march'd forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons. 2 Mac. xii. 26.

My father, when some days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica, Adriano's Cato.
Wept o'er me.
2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.
Plexirus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march. Sidney, b. ii.

Doth York intend no harm to us,
That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm. Shakef.
Our bodies, ev'ry footstep that they make,
March towards death, until at last they die. Davies.

Like thee appear,
When clad in rising majesty,
Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills. Prior.

The power of widom march'd before. Pope's Odyssey.
To MARCH. v. n.
1. To put in military movement.
Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendor of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers. Boyle on Colours.

2. To bring in regular procession.
March them again in fair array;
And bid them form the happy day;
The happy day design'd to wait
On William's fame, and Europe's fate. Prior.

MARCH. n. f. [marcher, French.]
1. Movement; journey of soldiers.
These troops came to the army harass'd with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and fought in their shirts. Bacon's War with Spain.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod,
These chosen troops, unconscious of the road,
And unacquainted with th' appointed end,
Their marches to begin, and thither tend. Blackmore.

Their march begins in military state. Van. of bu. 1738.
2. Grave and solemn walk.
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long misflick march, and energy divine. Pope.

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.
We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

4. Signals to move.
The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly towards Neofat. Knolly's Hist. of the Turks.

5. Marches, without singular. [march, Gothic; marches, French.] Borders; limits; confines.
They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our island from the pilfering borderers. Shakespeare.

The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them. Davies.
It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas. Davies on Ireland.

MARCHER. n. f. [from marcher, French.] President of the marches or borders.
Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties. Davies on Ireland.

MARCHIONESS. n. f. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchia.] The wife of a marquis.
The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke. Shakef. Henry VIII.

MARCHIPANE. n. f. [marchipane, French.] A kind of sweet bread, or biscuit.
Along whose ridge such bones are met,
Like comfits round in marchipane set. Sidney, b. ii.

MARCHID. adj. [marchidus, Latin.] Lean; pining; withered.
A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adhesion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marchid fever. Harvey on Cors.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil;
That to your marchid dying herbs assign'd,
By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind. Dryden.

MA'RCOUR. n. f. [marcor, Latin.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.
Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the extenuation and marchid in others, it much abridgeth our days. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

A marchid is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure. Harvey on Cors.

MARE. n. f. [mare, Saxon.]
1. The female of a horse.
A pair of couriers born of heav'nly breed,
Whom Circe stole from her celestial fire,
By substituting mares, produc'd on earth,
Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth. Dryd.

2. [From mara; the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.
Mab, his merry queen by night,
Besides young folks that lie upright;
In elder times the mare that hight,
Which plagues them out of measure. Drayton's Nymphid.

MARESCHAL. n. f. [mareschal, French, derived by Junius from mare, the female of an horse.] A chief commander of an army.
O William, may thy arms advance,
That he may lose Dinant next year,
And so be mareschal of France. Prior.

MARGARITE. n. f. [margarita, Latin; marguerite, French.] A pearl.
Silver is the second metal, and signifies purity; among the planets it holdeth with luna, among precious stones with the margarite or pearl. Peacocks on Blasphemy.

M A S

Truth's early champion, Socrates,
To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To put to death for virtue.
2. To murder; to destroy.

You could not beg for grace.
Hark wretches, how I mean to martyr you:
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats.
If to every common funeral,
By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,
Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud.
MARTYRDOM. n. f. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr;
the honour of a martyr.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom?
Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom.

Herod, whose unblest
Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness tore
A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,
The blooms of martyrdom.
What mists of providence are these,
So faints, by supernatural pow'r set free,
Are left at last in martyrdom to die.

MARTYROLOGY. n. f. [martyrologie, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.]
A register of martyrs.
In the Roman martyrology we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Diocletian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out.

MARTYROLOGIST. n. f. [martyrologiste, French.] A writer of martyrology.

MA'RVEL. n. f. [marveille, French.] A wonder; any thing astonishing.
A marvel it were, if a man could spy, in the whole scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.
I am scarce in breath, my lord.
—No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour; you cowardly raise!

No marvel
My lord protector's hawks do tower so well.
MARVEL of Peru. A flower.
To MARVEL. v. n. [marveille, French.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disfused.

strangeness; astonishingness.

MA'SCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Latin.]
1. Male; not female.

Pray God, the prove not masculine ere long!
His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements exercising their operation upon nature being the feminine.

O! why did God,
Creator wife! that peop'd highest heav'n
With spirits masculine, create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature?

2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.
You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of virtue.

3. [In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

MA'SCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.] Like a man.
Aurelia tells me, you have done most masculinely,
And play the orator.

ed or confused body. [from mischen, Dutch, to mix, or mas-cher, French.]

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pale, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm: this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour.

When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food.

To MASH. v. a. [mascher, French.]
1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apieces.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What was put in the first mashing-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing-tub.

MASK. n. f. [masque, French.]
1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.

Now love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
The air hath star'd at the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face.

Could we suppose that a mask represented never lo naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul spy'd,
Why dost thou strive the conscious flame to hide,
By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride?

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night.
4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild buffoon.

That at a masque and common revelling,
Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed.
This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask.

Content, though blind, had I no other guide.
5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick stile without attention to rules or probability.

Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks.

To MASK. v. a. [masquer, French.]
1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow out of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wits of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them.

'Tis not my blood
Wherein thou see'st me masked.

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was he;
But being mask'd he was not sure.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw in the Villa di Mattheo an antique statue mask'd, which was perhaps designed for Gnatho in the cunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons.

As when a piece of wanton lawn,
A thin aerial veil is drawn
O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
More sweetly shows the blushing bride:
A foul whole intellectual beams
No mists do mask, no lazy steams.

To MASK. v. n.
1. To revel; to play the mummer.

Thy gown? Why, ay; come, tailor, let us feel;
What masking stuff's here!

Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame.

2. To be disguised any way.

MA'SKER. n. f. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel it with him and his new bride.

Let the scenes abound with light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down.

The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
Like fairies, till the cock crow them away.

MA'SON. n. f. [maçon, French; machia, low Latin.] A builder with stone.

Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth.

A mason that makes a wall meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work.

MA'SONRY. n. f. [maçonnerie, Fr.] The craft or performance of a mason.

MASQUERA'DE. n. f. [from masque.]
1. A diversion in which the company is masked.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
In courtly balls, and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treacherous friend, and daring spark,
The glance by the whisper in the dark.

2. Disguise.

I was upon the frolick this evening, and came to visit thee in masquerade.

Truth, of all things the plainest and sincerest, is forced to gain admittance to us in disguise, and court us in masquerade.

To MASQUERA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an afs in the head, and away he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us.

MASQUERA'DER. n. f. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the vizard of friends.

MASS. n. f. [masse, Fr. massa, Latin.]
1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles the bodies, of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses.

Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outsides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass; they together constituted.

2. A large quantity.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury.

He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army.

3. Bulk; vast body.

The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation.

This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,
He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.

The whole knowledge of groupes, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, expos'd clearly to the light.

At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms, and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near.

Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours.

5. Gross body; the general.

Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects.

Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind
Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does move.

The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio at the head of their myrmidons.

If there is not a sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids.

6. [Missa, Latin.] The service of the Romish church.

Bunished gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert heretic.

He infers, that then Luther must have been unpardonably wicked in using masses for fifteen years.

To MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.

All their massing furniture almost they took from the law, least having an altar and a priest they should want vestments.

To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] It seems once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.

They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might annoy the haven.

MA'SSACRE. n. f. [massacre, French, from mazzare, Italian.]
1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.

Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men.

Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war.

2. Murder.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.

To MA'SSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, French, from the noun.]
To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction, and their family.

Christian religion, now crumbled into factions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not counterminus, or we recover to much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love.

MASSICOT. n. f. [French.]
Massicot is cerus calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, the white, the yellow, and that of a golden colour, their difference arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation.

White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-coloured massicot still more; all of them should be an impalpable powder, weighty and high-coloured: they are used in paints.

MA'SSINESS. n. f. [from mass, massive.] Weight; bulk;
MA'SSIVENESS. } ponderousness.

It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the massiness of the dish.

MA'SSIVE. adj. [massif, French.] Heavy; weighty; pon-MA'SSY. } derous; bulky; continuous.

If you would hurt,
Your swords are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted.

Perhaps these few stones and sling, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine.

No fideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd.

The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their present order to the deluge.

If these liquors or glasses were so thick and massy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye.

Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war.

Swift the signal giv'n,
They start away, and sweep the massy mound
That runs around the hill.

MAST. n. f. [mast, mât, French; mæst, Saxon.]
1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen.

He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the masts,
His vessel moor'd.

2. The fruit of the oak and beech.

The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full meils before you.

Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears.

When sheep feed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some masts.

The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mafi, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit.

As a savage boar,
With forest mafi and fawning marthes fed,
When once he fees himself in toils inclos'd,
Whets his tusks.

Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mafi of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs.

MASTED. adj. [from mafi.] Furnished with masts.
MASTER. n. f. [from mafi, Dutch; maître, French; magister, Latin.]

1. One who has servants; opposed to man or servant.

But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, mafi of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours my lord.

Take up thy mafi.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it;

And neither man nor mafi would take aught
But the two rings.

2. A director; a governor.

If thou be made the mafi of a feast, be among them as one of the rest.

My friend, my genius, come along,
Thou mafi of the poet, and the song.

3. Owner; proprietor.

An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyrick on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bucephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the mafi.

4. A lord; a ruler.

Wildom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the
mafi of a house.

There Cæsar, grac'd with both Minerva's, shone,
Cæsar, the world's great mafi, and his own.

The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a mafi.

5. Chief; head.

Chief mafi-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace.

As a wife mafi-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon.

6. Possessor.

When I have thus made myself mafi of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizier's daughter in marriage.

7. Commander of a trading ship.

An unhappy mafi is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wise, but after some bankrupts.

8. One uncontrolled.

Let ev'ry man be mafi of his time
Till seven at night.

9. A compellation of respect.

*Maft*er doctor, you have brought those drugs.
Stand by, my *maft*ers, bring him near the king.

10. A young gentleman.

If gaming does an aged fire entice,
Then my young mafi swiftly learns the vice.

11. One who teaches; a teacher.

Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his mafi.

To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first mafters of learning.

MASTERS and teachers should not raise difficulties to their schollars; but smooth their way, and help them forwards.

12. A man eminently skillful in practice or science.

The great mocking mafi mock'd not then,
When he said, 'Truth was buried here below.'

13. A title of dignity in the universities; as, mafi of arts.

To MA'STER. v. a. [from the noun.]

who struck the third.
MATCH. n. f. [mache, French; miccia, Italian; probably from mice, to shine, Latin: surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Saxon maca, a companion, because a match is companion to a gun.] Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.
Try them in several bottles matchet, and see which of them last longest without fench.
He made use of her trees as of matches to set Drina a fire.
Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use.
2. [From ματς, a fight, or from maca, Saxon, one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.
Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shaksp.
The goat was mine, by singing fairly won.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize.
3. [From maca, Saxon.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.
Government mitigates the inequality of power among particular persons, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects.
The old man has met with his match.
The natural flame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue.
4. One that suits or tallies with another.
5. A marriage.
The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Deserving such a wife as your fair daughter. Shaksp.
Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making.
With him the stove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand.
6. One to be married.
She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West.
To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To be equal to.
No fatted fens of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
O thou good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. To shew an equal.
No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct. South's Sermons.
3. To equal; to oppose.
Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milton.
What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.
The shepherd's calendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.
4. To suit; to proportion.
Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Rescommen.
Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Reue.
Employ their wit and humour in chiding and matching of patterns and colours. Swift's Miscel.
5. To marry; to give in marriage.
Great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shaksp. King Lear.
Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd unto the prince. Daniel's Civil War.
When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South's Sermons.
A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.
To MATCH. v. n.
1. To be married.
A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blef-sing to match with some heroic-minded lady. Sidney, b. ii.
I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shaksp.
Let tigers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,
And every creature couple with his foe. Dryd. Sp. Fryar.
All creatures else are much unworthy thee;
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.
2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.
MA'TCHABLE. adj. [from match.]
1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.
Yes, whole high worths surpassing Paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none.
Why did ye stoop unto so lowly fate? Spenser, Sonnet 66.
2. Correspondent.
Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found nowhere but in the deepest parts of the sea. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
MA'TCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Without an equal.
This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious faint, a matchless queen. Waller.
Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force.
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryd.
MA'TCHLESSLY. n. f. In a manner not to be equalled.
MA'TCHLESSNESS. n. f. [from matchless.] State of being without an equal.
MA'TCHMAKER. n. f. [match and make.]
1. One who contrives marriages.
You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras, p. iii.
2. One who makes matches to burn.
MATCH. n. f. [maca, Saxon; mact, Dutch.]
1. A husband or wife.
I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy match for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Fairy Queen.
2. A companion, male or female.
Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Beflow thy fawning smiles on equal mate.
My competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war. Shaksp.
You knew me once no mate
For you; there fitting where you durst not fear. Milton.
Damon, behold yon breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud:
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mates, and sing him on his way. Dryd.
Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.
3. The male or female of animals.
Part fagle, or with mate;
Graze the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral fray. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate. Ayliffe's Parergon.
4. One that fails in the same ship.
What vengeance on the passing fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mates devour'd. Rescommen.
5. One that eats at the same table.
6. The second in subordination; as, the master's mate; the chirurgion's mate.
To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To match; to marry.
Enslame make of him your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy,
Did soon pluck down, and curb'd my liberty. Fairy Qu.
The hind, that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.
2. To be equal to.
Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the maffful chestnut mates the skies. Dryden.
Parnassus is its name; whose forky rife
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:
High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion wafting moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.
3. To

MAT

To oppose; to equal.
I'll th' way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a founder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
4. [Mater, French; mater, Spanish.] To subdue; to confound; to crush.
That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit. Shaksp.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity doth almost bind the weaker sort of minds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
My sense the as mater, and amaz'd my fight. Shaksp.
Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shaksp.
MATERIAL. adj. [material, French; materialis, Latin.]
1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.
When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see. Davies.
That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.
2. Important; momentous; essential.
We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature. Hosker, b. v.
Hold them for catholics, or heretics, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this present question, material.
What part of the world sever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Christ. Hosker, b. v.
It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein,
very material to the state of that government.
The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that book, neither is it material.
He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 98.
I pass the rest, whose ev'ry race and name,
And kinds are less material to my theme. Dryden's Virg.
As for the more material faults of writing, though I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them. Dryden.
I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.
In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Swift.
MATERIALS. n. f. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; material, French.] The substance of which any thing is made.
The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.
Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. i.
David, who made such rich provision of materials for the building of the temple, because he had dip't his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.
That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone alchistus, which being once enkindled will burn without being consumed. Wilk.
The materials of that building very fortunately rang'd themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them.
Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.
Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made.
Materials for an house decay'd. Swift's Miscel.
MATERIALIST. n. f. [from material.] One who denies spiritual substances.
He was bent upon making Memmius a materialist. Dryd.
MATERIALITY. n. f. [materialit, Fr. from material.] Cor-poreity; material existence; not spirituality.
Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.
MATERIALLY. adv. [from material.]
1. In the state of matter.
I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.
2. Not formally.
Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil. South's Sermons.

3. Importantly; essentially.
All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially;
as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. Spenser on Ireland.
MATERIALNESS. n. f. [from material.] State of being material; importance.
MATERIATE. } adj. [materiatus, Latin.] Consisting of mat-MATERIATED. } ter.
After long enquiry of things immerse in matter, interpose some subject which is immaterial or less material, such as this of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 114.
MATERIATION. n. f. [from materia, Lat.] The act of forming matter.
Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself. Brown.
MATERNAL. adj. [materne, Fr. maternus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.
The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew his mother in her smiles;
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.
MATERNITY. n. f. [maternit, French, from materius, Lat.]
The character or relation of a mother.
MAT-FELON. n. f. [matter, to kill, and felon, a thief.] A species of knap-weed growing wild.
MATHEMATICAL. adj. [mathematicus, Lat.] Considered MATHEMATICK. } according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.
The East and West;
Upon the globe, a mathematic point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham's Sephy.
It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a body. Boyle.
I suppose all the particles of matter to be situated in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley's Serm.
MATHEMATICALLY. adv. [from mathematick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.
We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sun-beams, and is reci-procally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun. Bentley's Sermons.
MATHEMATICIAN. n. f. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematicien, French.] A man versed in the mathematics.
One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Æneas's voyage by the map. Addison's Spect.
MATHEMATICKS. n. f. [mathematick, Lat.] That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt: pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations. Harris.
The mathematick and the metaphysicks
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you. Shak.
See mystery to mathematick fly. Pope.
MATHES. n. f. An herb. Pope.
MATHESIS. n. f. [μαθησις.] The doctrine of mathematics.
Mad Mathesis alone was unconfin'd. Pope.
MATIN. adj. [matine, French; matutinus, Latin.] Morning; used in the morning.
Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet rung. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee;
Thy image steals between my god and me. Pope.
MATIN. n. f. Morning.
The glow-worm shews the matin to be near,
And gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shaksp.
MATINS. n. f. [matins, French.] Morning worship.
The winged choristers began
To chirp their matins. Cleaveland.
By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques:
the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.
That he should raise his mitred crest on high,
And clap his wings, and call his family
To sacred rites; and vex th' ethereal powers
With midnight matins, at uncivil hours. Dryden.
MATRASS. n. f. [matras, French.] Matrass is the name of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually taper into a conical figure. Quincy.
Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennached tulips and ranunculus, covering them with matras. Evelyn's Kalendar.

MATRICE.

MAT

MA'TRICE. n. f. [matrix, Latin.]
 1. The womb; the cavity where the fetus is formed.
 If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.
 2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.
 Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them. Woodward.
MA'TRICIDE. n. f. [matricidium, Latin.]
 1. Slaughter of a mother.
 Nature compensates the death of the father by the matricide and murder of the mother. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 2. [Matricida, Latin; matricide, Fr.] A mother killer. Ainsl.
TO MA'TRY'ULATE. v. a. [from matricula: a matrix, quod cavet matrice continentur militum nomina. Ainsl.] To enter or admit to a membership of the universities of England; to enlist; to enter into any society by setting down the name.
 He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself of that college, and after to matriculate him in the university. Walton's Life of Sanderson.
MATRICULATE. n. f. [from the verb.] A man matriculated.
 Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions. Arbutnot.
MATRICULATION. n. f. [from matriculation.] The act of matriculating.
 A scholar absent from the university for five years, is struck out of the matriculation book; and, upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated. Ayliffe.
MATRIMONIAL. adj. [matrimonial, Fr. from matrimonium, Latin.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; conjugal; nuptial; hymeneal.
 If he relied upon that title, he could be but a king at courtesy, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, the right remaining in his queen. Bacon's Henry VII.
 So spake domestic Adam in his care,
 And matrimonial love. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
 Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife;
 Which, having fairly gain'd, I will resign.
 The matrimonial victory is mine. Dryden.
MATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from matrimonial.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.
 He is so matrimonially wedded unto his church, that he cannot quit the same, even on the score of going unto a religious house. Ayliffe's Paragon.
MA'TRIMONY. n. f. [matrimonium, Lat.] Marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife; nuptials.
 If any know cause why this couple should not be joined in holy matrimony, they are to declare it. Common Prayer.
MAT'RIX. n. f. [Lat. matrice, Fr.] Womb; a place where any thing is generated or formed.
 If they be not lodged in a convenient matrix, they are not excited by the efficacy of the fun. Brown's Vulgar Err.
MA'TRON. n. f. [matrona, French; matrona, Latin.]
 1. An elderly lady.
 Come, civil night,
 Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakespeare.
 Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up
 The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 She was in her early bloom, with a discretion very little inferior to the most experienced matrons. Tatler, No. 53.
 2. An old woman.
 A matron sage Supports with homely food his drooping age. Pope's Odyf.
MA'TRONAL. adj. [matronalis, Latin.] Suitable to a matron; constituting a matron.
 He had heard of the beauty and virtuous behaviour of the queen of Naples, the widow of Ferdinand the younger, being then of matronal years of seven and twenty. Bacon.
MA'TRONLY. adj. matron and like.] Elderly; ancient.
 The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. L'Estrange's Fables.
MATROSS. n. f.
Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them: they carry firelocks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break. Bailey.
MA'TTER. n. f. [matere, French; matéria, Latin.]
 1. Body; substance extended.
 If then the soul another soul do make,
 Because her pow'r is kept within a bound,
 She must some former stuff or matter take,
 But in the soul there is no matter found. Dreier.
 It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space, as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive bodies compounded of them, even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation. Neut.

MAT

 Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts's Logic.
 2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.
 The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.
 3. Subject; thing treated.
 The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted. Hooker, b. i.
 I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Son of God, Saviour of men! Thy name
 Shall be the copious matter of my song. Milt. Par. Lost.
 It is matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the common boldness of men. Decay of Piety.
 I shall turn
 Full fraught with joyful tidings of these works,
 New matter of his praise, and of our songs. Dryden.
 He grants the deluge to have come so very near the matter, that but very few escaped. Tilley.
 This is to certain in true philosophy, that it is matter of astonishment to me how it came to be doubted. Clepe.
 Be thou the copious matter of my song. Phillips.
 4. The whole; the very thing supposed.
 5. Affair; business: in a familiar sense.
 To help the matter, the alchemists call in many vanities out of astrology. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Matters succeeded so well with him, that every-body was in admiration to see how mighty rich he was grown. L'Estr.
 Never was any thing gotten by sensuality and sloth in matter of profit or reputation. L'Estrange's Fables.
 A fawn was reasoning the matter with a stag, why he should run away from the dogs. L'Estrange's Fables.
 Some young female seems to have carried matters so far, that she is ripe for asking advice. Spilator.
 If chance herself should vary,
 Observe how matters would miscarry. Prior.
 6. Cause of disturbance.
 Where art thou? What's the matter with thee? Shak.
 What's the matter, you diffident rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make yourselves scabs. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 7. Subject of suit or complaint.
 Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?
 —Marry, Sir, I have matter in my head against you. Shak.
 If the craftsmen have a matter against any man, the law is open; let them plead one another. Acts xix. 38.
 In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the gro, it would go on the other. Bacon.
 8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.
 If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor shew doth better. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 And please yourselves this day;
 No matter from what hands you have the play. Dryden.
 A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
 No matter which, so neither of them lye,
 From sleepy Ochrys' top to Pilus drove His herd. Dryden.
 Pleas'd or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
 The first who dares be angry breaths his last. Graville.
 9. Thing; object; that which has some particular relation, or is subject to particular consideration.
 The king of Armenia had in his company three of the most famous men for matters of arms. Sidney, b. ii.
 Plato reprehended a young man for entering into a dissolute house; the young man said, Why for so small a matter?
 Plato replied, But custom is no small matter. Bacon.
 Many times the things deduced to judgment may be mean and tum, when the reason and consequence thereof may trench to point of estate. I call matter of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent. Bacon's Essays.
 It is a maxim in state, that all countries of new acquisition, till they be settled, are rather matters of burden than of strength. Bacon's War with Spain.
 10. Question considered.

 12. Purulent running; that which is formed by suppuration.
 In an inflamed tubercle in the great angle of the left eye, the matter being suppurated I opened it. Wifeman's Surgery.
 13. Upon the MATTER. A low phrase now out of use, importing, considering the whole; with respect to the main; nearly.
 In their superiors it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors asleep; so that upon the matter, in a great wit deformity is an advantage to ruling. Bacon's Essays.
 Upon the matter, in these prayers I do the same thing I did before, save only that what before I spake without book I now read. Bishop Sanderson.
 The elder, having consumed his whole fortune, when forced to leave his title to his younger brother, left upon the matter nothing to support it. Clarendon.
 Waller, with Sir William Balfour, exceeded in horse, but were, upon the matter, equal in foot. Clarendon, b. viii.
 If on one side there are fair proofs, and no pretence of proof on the other, and that the difficulties are most pressing on that side which is destitute of proof, I desire to know, whether this be not upon the matter as satisfactory to a wife man as a demonstration. Tilley's Sermons.
TO MAT'TER. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To be of importance; to import.
 It matters not, so they deny it all;
 And can but carry the lye constantly. Dry. Johnson's Catal.
 It matters not how they were called, so we know who they are. Locke.
 If Petrarch's muse did Laura's wit rehearse;
 And Cowley flatter'd dear Orinda's verse;
 She hopes from you—Pox take her hopes and fears,
 I plead her sex's claim: what matters hers? Prior.
 2. To generate matter by suppuration.
 Deadly wounds inward bleed, each slight sore mattered. Sidney, b. i.
 The herpes beneath mattered, and were dried up with common epulotics. Wifeman's Surgery.

 1. Ripe; perfected by time.

MAU

When once he was mature for man:
 In Britain where was he,
 That could stand up his parallel,
 Or rival object be? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 Their prince is a man of learning and virtue, mature in years and experience, who has seldom any vanity to gratify. Addison on Italy.
Mature the virgin was of Egypt's race,
 Grace shap'd her limbs, and beauty deck'd her face. Prior.
 How shall I meet, or how accost the sage,
 Unskill'd in speech, not yet mature of age. Pope's Odyf.
 Brought near to completion.
 This lies glowing, and is mature for the violent breaking out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Here 'th' sands
 There I'll rake up; and in the mature time,
 With this ungracious paper strike the fight
 Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. Well-disposed; fit for execution; well-digested.
TO MAT'URE. v. a. [mature, Latin.] To ripen; to advance to ripeness.
 Pick an apple with a pin full of holes, not deep, and smear it a little with sack, to see if the virtual heat of the wine will not mature it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Love indulg'd my labours past,
Matures my present, and shall bound my last. Pope.
MAT'URELY. adv. [from mature.]
 1. Ripely; completely.
 2. With counsel well-digested.
 A prince ought maturely to consider, when he enters on a war, whether his coffers be full, and his revenues clear of debts. Swift.
 3. Early; soon.
 We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians; that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial, and receiving us more maturely into those everlasting habitations above. Bentley's Sermons.
MAT'URITY. n. f. [matutrité, French; maturitas, Lat.] Ripeness; completion.
 It may not be unfit to call some of young years to train up for those weighty affairs, against the time of greater mat'urity. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

 To start from time, and cheerfully to fly
 Before, and seize upon maturity. Cragshaw.
 Various mortifications must be undergone, many difficulties and obstructions conquered, before we can arrive at a just maturity in religion. Rogers's Sermons.
MA'UDLIN. adj. [Maudlin is the corrupt appellation of Magdalen, who being drawn by painters with swollen eyes, and disordered look, a drunken countenance, seems to have been so named from a ludicrous resemblance to the picture of Magdalen.] Drunk; fuddled.
 And the kind maudling crowd melts in her praise. Southey's Spartan Dame.
 And largely, what the wants in words, supplies
 With maudlin eloquence of trickling eyes. Roscommon.
MA'UDLIN. n. f. [ageratum, Latin.] A plant.
 The flowers of the maudlin are digested into loose umbels, but in other respects it is very like the cossmary. The species are three. Miller.
MA'UGRE. adj. [malgré, French.] In spite of; notwithstanding.
 It is now out of use.
Maugre all the world, will I keep safe;
 Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome. Shakespeare.
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence;
 Thy valour, and thy heart; thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.
 I through the ample air in triumph high Shall lead hell captive; maugre hell! and show
 The pow'rs of darkness bound. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Maugre all which, 'twas to stand fast,
 As long as monarchy should last. Hudibras, p. i.
 He prophesied of the success of his gospel; which, after his death, immediately took root, and spread itself everywhere, maugre all opposition or persecution. Burnet.
MA'VIS. n. f. [maavis, French.] A thrush. An old word.
 The world that cannot deem of worthy things,
 When I do praise her, say I do but flatter;
 So doth the cuckoo, when the maavis sings,
 Begins his witless note apace to clear. Spenser's Sonnet.
 In birds, kites have a resemblance with hawks, and blackbirds with thrushes and maavises. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
TO MAUL. v. a. [from maulus, Latin.] To beat; to bruise;
 Will he who saw the soldier's mutton fist,
 And saw thee maul'd, appear within the list,
 To witness truth? Dryden's Juvenal.
 Once every week poor Hannibal is maul'd,
 The theme is given, and straight the council's call'd,
 Whether he should to Rome directly go. Dryden's Juvenal.

MAY

- I had some repute for profe;
And, till they drove me out of date,
Could maul a minister of state.
But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack and maul.
- MAUL. n. f. [maulus, Latin.] A heavy hammer.

A meacock wretch can make the curliest shrew. Shakespeare.
MEAD. n. f. [maeo, Saxon; meithe, Dutch; metb, German; hydrant, Lat.] A kind of drink made of water and honey.
Though not so salutary a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach. Bacon.
He sheers his over-burden'd sheep;
Or mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.
MEAD. n. f. [maeo, Sax.] Ground somewhat watery, not MEADOW. } plowed, but covered with grass and flowers.
Where all thing in common do rest,
Come feed with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead?
A hand select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,
Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
When lavish nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire.
Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed. Waller.
MEADOW-SAFFRON. n. f. [colchicum, Lat.] A plant.
The meadow-saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments: it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin. Miller.

1. Lean; wanting flesh; starven.
Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate. Hubbard.
Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chafe the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghozt,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit. Shakespeare. King John.
The recking entrails
Meager were his looks, Shakespeare.
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones. Shakespeare.
Whatsoever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meager. L'Estrange.
He to his meagre maliffs made a prey.
Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,
In swarms th' offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground:
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.
2. Poor; hungry.
Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a Sabbath year to mend the meagre soil. Dryden.
To ME'AGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make lean.

Hath made his meal on thee? Shakespeare. Tempest.
Give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils. Shakespeare. Henry V.
They made m' a mifer's feast of happiness,
And cou'd not furnish out another meal. Dryden.
3. A part; a fragment.
That yearly rent is still paid into the hanaper, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meal, brought in, and answered there. Bacon.
4. [Malepe, Saxon; mael, Dutch; mahlen, to grind, German.] The flower or edible part of corn.
In the bolting and sifting of near fourteen years of such power and favour, all that came out could not be expected to be pure and fine meal, but must have a mixture of padar and bran in this lower age of human fragility. Patten.
An old weazel conveys himself into a meal-tub for the mice to come to her, since she could not go to them. L'Estrange's Fables.
To MEAL. v. a. [meler, French.] To sprinkle; to mingle.
Were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he tyrannous. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
ME'ALMAN. n. f. [meal and man.] One that deals in meal.
ME'ALY. adj. [from meal.]
1. Having the taste or soft insipidity of meal; having the qualities of meal.
The mealy parts of plants dissolved in water make too viscid an aliment. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. Besprinkled, as with meal.
With four wings, as all farinaceous and mealy-winged animals, as butterflies and moths. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.
Like a gay insect, in his summer thine,
The top light fluttering spreads his mealy wings. Thomson.
MEALY-MOUTHED. adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed; but perhaps from the fore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to comminute their grain, must be fed with meal.] Soft mouthed; unable to speak freely.
She was a fool to be mealy-mouthed where nature speaks so plain. L'Estrange.
MEALY-MOUTHEDNESS. n. f. [from the adjective.] Bathfulness; restraint of speech.

- MEAN. adj. [meane, Saxon.]
 1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.
 She was tricked with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Anti-philus; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her.
 This fairest maid of fairer mind;
 By fortune mean, in nature born a queen. Sidney.
 Let pale-face'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
 And find no harbour in a royal heart. Shaksp. Henry VI.
 True hope is swift, and flies with swallow wings;
 Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures, kings. Shak.
 The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
 More than I know the sound of Marcius' tongue
 From every meaner man. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 Can you imagine I to mean could prove,
 To fave my life by changing of my love? Dryden.
 We fast not to please men, nor to promote any mean, worldly interest. Smalridge's Sermons.
 2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.
 The Roman legions, and great Caesar found
 Our fathers no mean foes. Philips.
 I have sacrificed much of my own self-love, in preventing not only many mean things from seeing the light, but many which I thought tolerable. Pope.
 3. Contemptible; despicable.
 The lands he not holden of her majesty in chief, but by a mean tenure in foggage, or by knight's service at the most.
 By this extortion he suddenly grew from a mean to a mighty estate, inasmuch that his ancient inheritance being not one thousand marks yearly, he became able to dispense ten thousand pounds. Davies on Ireland.
 To peaceful Rome new laws ordain;
 Call'd from his mean abode a sceptre to sustain. Dryden.
 4. [Mean, French.] Middle; moderate; without excess.
 He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best-graced men that ever I saw, being of middle age and a mean stature. Sidney, b. ii.
 Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.
 5. Intervening; intermediate.
 In the mean while the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. 1 Kings xviii. 45.
 There is French wheat, which is bearded, and requieth the best soil, recompensing the same with a profitable plenty; and not wheat, so termed because it is unbearded, is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain.
Carew on Cornwall.
 MEAN. n. f. [mean, French.]
 1. Mediocrity; middle rate; medium.
 Our mean securities, and our mere defects Prove our commodities. Shaksp. King Lear.
 Temperance with golden square,
 Betwixt them both can measure out a mean. Shaksp.
 There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist, and out of which they never can depart. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 But no authority of gods or men
 Allow of any mean in poeie. Roscommon.
 Against her then her forces prudence joins,
 And to the golden mean herself confines. Denham.
 2. Measure; regulation.
 The rolling sea rebounding soft,
 In his big bafe them fully answered,
 And on the rock the waves breaking aloft,
 A solemn mean unto them measured. Fairy Queen.
 3. Interval; interim; mean time.
 But fith this wretched woman overcome,
 Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,
 Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,
 And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb. Fairy Queen.
 4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.
 Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety. Sidney, b. i.
 As long as that which Christians did was good, and no way subject to just reproach, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the Heathens conversion unto Christ. Hooker.
 It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, committeth inebriety, and alledgeth that his wits were not his own; in as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him. Hooker, b. i.

M E A

- He tempering goodly well
 Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
 Did place them all in order, and compell
 To keep themselves within their fundry reigns,
 Together link'd with adamant chains. Spenser.
 I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
 Out of the way, that your converse and business
 May be more free. Shaksp. Othello.
 No place will please me so, no mean of death,
 As here by Caesar and by you cut off. Shaksp.
 Nature is made better by no mean,
 But nature makes that mean; so over that art
 Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
 That nature makes. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
 Your doctrine leads them to look on this end as essential, and on the means as indifferent. Lord Bolingbroke to Swift.
 5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular.
 The more base art thou,
 To make such means for her as thou hast done,
 And leave her on such slight conditions. Shaksp.
 By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harraided with a long march. Bacon's Henry III.
 Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner. Davies on Ireland.
 Strong was their plot,
 Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
 Their practice close, their faith suspected not. Daniel.
 By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes.
 Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view. Locke.
 A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good. Atterbury's Sermons.
 It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness. Atterbury's Sermons.
 6. By all MEANS. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.
 7. By no MEANS. Not in any degree; not at all.
 The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other. Addison on Italy.
 8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from defmes.
 Your means are very slender, and your waste is great. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 Rust sword; cool blushes; and, parolles, live Safest in flame! being fool'd, by fool'ry thrive;
 There's place and means for every man alive. Shaksp.
 For competence of life I will allow you,
 That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
 And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
 Give you advancement. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 Eliza did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means. Watson.
 9. MEAN-TIME. In the intervening time: sometimes from MEAN-WHILE. } adverbial mode of speech.
 The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
 New heav'n and earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.
 Mean-time the rapid heav'n's rowl'd down the light,
 And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night. Dryden.
 Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
 His waving streamers to the winds displays. Dryden.
 Mean time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
 Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes. Dryden.
 Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
 And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison's Cato.
 The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and daily harraided by cruel invaders from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.
 To MEAN. v. n. [meanen, Dutch.] To have in the mind; to intend; to purpose.
 When your children shall say, What mean you by this service? ye shall say, It is the passover. Exod. xii. 26.
 These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton.
 To MEAN. v. a.
 1. To purpose; to intend; to design.
 To purpose evil against me; but God meant it unto good. Gen. i. 20.
 To fave much people alive.
 And life more perfect had attain'd than fate
 Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot. Milton.
 I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer
 With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear:
 So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
 Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.
 2. To

M E A

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.
 I more easily forlake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgment in your choice of friends. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
 Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.
 MEANDER. n. f. [Mæander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine windings; winding course.
 Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
 'Tis well, that while mankind
 Through fate's perverse meander errs,
 He can imagin'd pleasures find,
 To combat against real cares. Prior.
 While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
 They scatter verdant life on either side;
 The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
 And wealthy births confest the floods embrace. Blackmore.
 Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Heus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbutnot.
 MEANDROUS. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.
 MEANING. n. f. [from mean.]
 1. Purpose; intention.
 I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning toward
 you. Shaksp. King Lear.
 2. Habitual intention.
 Some whole meaning hath at first been fair,
 Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair. Roscommon.
 3. The sense; the thing understood.
 The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
 Not of the Muses mine. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
 These lost the sense their learning to display,
 And those explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.
 No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood: however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended. Swift's Miscel.
 MEANLY. adv. [from mean.]
 1. Moderately; not in a great degree.
 Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affectioned to set forward learning in others. Acham's Schoolmaster.
 In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourished. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 2. Without dignity; poorly.
 It was the winter wild,
 While the heav'n-born child,
 All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.
 The Persian state will not endure a king
 So meanly born. Denham's Sophy.
 3. Without greatness of mind; ungenuinely.
 Would you meanly thus rely
 On power, you know I must obey. Prior.
 4. Without respect.
 Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something delectable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Legick.
 MEANNESS. n. f. [from mean.]
 1. Want of excellence.
 The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of common prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.
 This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison on Italy.
 2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.
 No other nymphs have title to meins hearts,
 But as their meanness larger hopes imparts. Waller.
 Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good. South's Sermons.
 3. Lowliness of mind.
 The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowliness of condition. South's Sermons.
 4. Sordidness; negligenceness.
 MEANT, perf. and part. pass. of to mean.
 By Silvia if thy charming self be meant;
 If friendship be thy virgin vows extent:
 O! let me in Aminta's praises join;
 Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.
 MEASURE. n. f. [probably a corruption of measure: as, a measure of herings is five hundred.]
 MEASLES. n. f. [measles, Latin.] Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice, and bear this name, which is a diminutive of morbus, because it hath been accounted a species

M E A

- of such malignant and pestilential fevers, to which comparatively this is in a much inferior degree. Quincy.
 My lungs
 Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
 Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
 The very way to catch them. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
 Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbutnot.
 2. A disease of swine.
 One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it; nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed; the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. B. Johnson's Discovery.
 3. A disease of trees.
 Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles, by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 MEASLED. adj. [from measles.] Infected with the measles.
 Thou vermin wretched,
 As e'er in measled pork was hatched;
 Thou tail of worthip, that dost grow
 On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras, p. i.
 MEASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed with the measles.
 Last trotted forth the gentle swine,
 To ease her against the stumps,
 And distantly was heard to whine,
 All as the scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.
 MEASURABLE. adj.
 1. Such as may be measured; such as may admit of computation.
 God's eternal duration is permanent and indivisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley's Sermons.
 2. Moderate; in small quantity.
 MEASURABLENESS. n. f. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.
 MEASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.
 Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclesi. xxxi. 28.
 MEASURE. n. f. [measure, French; mensura, Latin.]
 1. That by which any thing is measured.
 A taylor's news,
 Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
 Standing on flippers, which his nimble hatte
 Had fallily thrust upon contrary feet, Told of many a thousand. Shaksp. King John.
 A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.
 All magnitudes are capable of being measured; but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measures. Holder on Time.
 When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure he meant: that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt.
 2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.
 God's goodness is the measure of his providence. Mare.
 I expect, from those that judge by first light and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent. Glanville's Scip.
 3. Proportion; quantity settled.
 Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.
 I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment; yet it is certain there is such a law. Locke.
 4. A stated quantity: as, a measure of wine.
 Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
 The table round. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 5. Sufficient quantity.
 I'll never pause again,
 Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine.
 Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shaksp. Measure.
 Allotment; portion allotted.
 Good Kent, how shall I live and work
 To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
 And every measure fail me. Shaksp. King Lear.
 We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.
 If else thou seek'st
 Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milton.
 Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoic, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson's Sermons.
 7. Degree.
 I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Alber's Description of the World.
 There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own

- own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over-scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
- The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and conflagration of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
8. Proportionate time; musical time.
- Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.
9. Motion harmonically regulated.
- My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport.
As when the stars in their ethereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryden.
10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.
- Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and anchentury. Shakespeare.
- Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shakespeare.
11. Moderation; not excess.
- O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstacy;
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it leis,
For fear I surfeit. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
- Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isa. vi. 14.
12. Limit; boundary. In the same sense is
- Τὸ ἐν τῷ δεκάδῳ τριάζει δὲ, μέτρον ἔσται
Ἡμεῖς τοὺς δεκάδῳ τριάζει δὲ, μέτρον ἔσται Ἀρκεῖται τὸ δεκάδῳ.
- Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psal.
13. Any thing adjusted.
- He only lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other mens eyes and tongues. Taylor's holy living.
- Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Smalbridge's Sermons.
14. Syllables metrically numbered; metre.
- I addressed thee to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.
- The numbers themselves, though of the heroic measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pope.
15. Tune; proportionate notes.
- The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet. Spenser.
16. Mean of action; means to an end.
- His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.
17. To have hard measure; to be hardly dealt by.
18. To measure, v. a. [measure, French; mensura, Latin.]
- To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.
- Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronea, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon's Apophth.
2. To pass through; to judge of extent by marching over.
- A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shakespeare.
- I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park-gate; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shakespeare.
- The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dryden.
3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.
- Great are thy works, Jehovah; infinite Thy power! What thought can measure thee, or tongue Relate thee? Milton's Par. Lost, l. vii.
4. To adjust; to proportion.
- To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.
- Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.
5. To mark out in stated portions.
- What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Addison's Spectator.
6. To allot or distribute by measure.

ME C

- With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again.
- MEASURELESS. adj. [from measure.] Immenſe; immeaſurable.
- He shut up the measures of content.
- MEASUREMENT. n. f. [from measure.] Mensuration; act of measuring.
- MEASURER. n. f. [from measure.] One that measures.
- MEASURING. adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.
- When lusty shepherds throw
The bar by turns, and none the rest out-go
So far, but that the best are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pasture lasts. Wallis.
- MEAT. n. f. [met, French.]
1. Flesh to be eaten.
- To his father he sent ten the asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat, for his father by the way. Gen. xlv. 23.
- Carnivores, and birds of prey, are no good meat; but the reason is, rather the cholerick nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh; for pews and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat.
- There was a multitude of excises; as, the vegetable, a tax upon meat.
2. Food in general.
- Never words were musick to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-favour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake or carv'd. Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors.
- Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God shall destroy both. 1 Cor. vi. 13.
- MEATED. adj. [from meat.] Fed; foddered.
- Strong oxen and horses, well shod and well clad,
Well meat and used. Tusser's Hyst.
- MEATHE. n. f. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwi ebrius sum.] Drink.
- For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive must, and meath.
- MEAZLING. part. generally called mizzling. See MIZZLE.
- The air feels more moist when the water is in small than in great drops; in meazling and soaking rain, than in great showers. Arbutnot on Air.
- MECHANICAL. adj. [mechanicus, Lat. mecanique, French;]
- MECHANICK. n. f. [from μηχανη.]
1. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.
- Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession? Shakespeare.
- Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue; I will stare him out of his wits; I will hew him with my cudgel. Shakespeare.
- Mechanick slaves,

MEDIC. n. f. [medica, Latin.] A plant.

The medic hath a papilionaceous or butterfly flower, out of which empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes an intorted pod, sometimes like a ram's horn, in which are lodged kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

MEDICAL. adj. [medicus, Lat.] Physical; relating to the art of healing; medicinal.

In this work attempts will exceed performances, it being composed by snatches of time, as medical vacation would permit.

MEDICALLY. adv. [from medical.] Physically; medicinally.

That which promoted this consideration, and medically advanced the same, was the doctrine of Hippocrates. Brycne.

MEDICAMENT. n. f. [medicamentum, Fr. medicamentum, Latin.] Any thing used in healing; generally topical applications.

Admonitions, fraternal or paternal, then more publick reprehensions; and, upon the unsuccessfulness of these milder medicaments, the use of that stronger physick, the censures.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

A cruel wound was cured by scalding medicaments, after it was putrified; and the violent swelling and bruise of another was taken away by scalding it with milk. Temple's Miscel.

MEDICAMENTAL. adj. [medicamentum, Fr. from medicamentum.] Relating to medicine, internal or topical.

MEDICAMENTALLY. n. f. [from medicamentum.] After the manner of medicine; with the power of medicine.

The substance of gold is invincible by the powerfullest action of natural heat; and that not only accidentally in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporeal conversion.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

TO MEDICATE. v. a. [medico, Lat.] To tincture or impregnate with any thing medicinal.

The fumes, steams, and fumes of London, do so medicate and impregnate the air about it, that it becomes capable of little more.

He advieth to observe the times of the equinoxes and solstices, and to declare medication ten days before and after.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

MEDICINABLE. adj. [medicinalis, Lat.] Having the power of physick.

Old oil is more clear and hot in medicinal use. Bacon.

Accept a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which gives any wine infused therein for four and twenty hours the taste and operation of the Spaw water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen.

Watson.

The jaw-bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are medicinal.

Walton's Angler.

MEDICINAL. adj. [medicinalis, Latin:] this word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly, and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicinal.

1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.

Come with words as medicinal as true,

Honest as either; to purge him of that humour

That presses him from sleep. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.

Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tender parts;

Exasperate, exulcerate and raise

Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb

Nor medicinal liquor can alluage. Milton's Agonistes.

The second causes took the swift command,

The medicinal head, the ready hand;

All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art. Dryden.

2. Belonging to physick.

Learn'd he was in medicinal lore,

For by his side a pouch he wore,

Replete with strange hermetick powder,

That wounds nine miles point-blank with folder. Butler.

Such are called medicinal-days by some writers, wherein no crisis or change is expected, so as to forbid the use of medicines: but it is most properly used for those days wherein purging, or any other evacuation, is more conveniently complied with.

Quincy.

Medicinal-hours are those wherein it is supposed that medicines may be taken, commonly reckoned in the morning fasting, about an hour before dinner, about four hours after dinner, and going to bed; but times are to be governed by the symptoms and aggravation of the distemper.

Quincy.

MEDICINALLY. adv. [from medicinal.] Physically.

The witnesses that leech-like liv'd on blood,

Sucking for them were medicinally good. Dryden.

O, my dear father! restoration, hang

Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss

Repair those violent harms. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,

To cure this deadly grief. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A merry heart doth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones. Prov. xvii. 22.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure;

Detest the med-ic-ine, yet desire the cure. Dryden.

To MEDICINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To operate as physick.

Not used.

Not all the drowsy syrups of the world,

Shall ever medicate thee to that sweet sleep

Which thou owdest yesterday. Shakespeare.

MEDICITY. n. f. [medietas, Fr. medietas, Lat.] Middle state; participation of two extremes; half.

They contained no fishy compofure, but were made up of man and bird; the human medicity variously placed not only above but below.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MEDICRITY. n. f. [mediocritas, French; mediocritas, Lat.] 1. Small degree; middle rate; middle state.

Men of age seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a medicrity of success. Bacon.

There appeared a sudden and marvellous conversion in the duke's case, from the most exalted to the most depressed, as if his expedition had been capable of no medicrity. Watson.

He likens the medicrity of wit to one of a mean fortune, who manages his store with great parsimony; but who, with fear of running into profusion, never arrives to the magnificence of living.

Dryden's State of Innocence.

Getting and improving our knowledge in substances only by experience and history, is all that the weakness of our faculties in this state of medicrity, while we are in this world, can attain to.

Locke.

2. Moderation; temperance. Obsolete.

Left appetite, in the use of food, should lead us beyond that which is meet, we owe, in this case, obedience to that law of reason which teacheth medicrity in meats and drinks.

Hobbes, b. i.

When they urge us to extreme opposition against the church of Rome, do they mean we should be drawn into it only for a time, and afterwards return to a medicrity. Hobbes.

TO MEDITATE. v. a. [meditari, French; meditari, Lat.] To plan; to scheme; to contrive.

Blessed is the man that doth meditate good things in wisdom, and that reasoneth of holy things by his understanding.

Some affirmed that I meditated a war; God knows, I did not then think of war.

King Charles.

Like a lion that unheeded lay,

And that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Now will he sit under a medlar tree,

And with his mistress were that kind of fruit,

Which maids call medlars. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.

I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

2. Inland; remote from the sea.

It is found in mountains and mediterranean parts; and so it is a fat and unctuous sublimation of the earth. Brown.

We have taken a less height of the mountains than is requisite, if we respect the mediterranean mountains, or those that are at a great distance from the sea. Burnet.

MEDIVM. n. f. [medium, Latin.]

1. Any thing intervening.

Whether any other liquors, being made mediums, cause a diversity of sound from water, it may be tried. Bacon.

I must bring together

All these extremes; and must remove all mediums,

That each may be the other's object. Denham.

Seeing requires light and a free medium, and a right line to the objects; we can hear in the dark, immured, and by curve lines.

Holder.

He, who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, often sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour the object.

Addison's Spect. No. 257.

The parts of bodies on which their colours depend, are denser than the medium which pervades their interstices. Newt.

Against filling the heavens with fluid mediums, unless they be exceeding rare, a great objection arises from the regular and very lasting motions of the planets and comets in all manner of courses through the heavens. Newton's Opticks.

2. Any thing used in ratiocination, in order to a conclusion; the middle term in an argument, by which propositions are connected.

This cannot be answered by those mediums which have been used. Dryden's Juvenal.

We, whose understandings are short, are forced to collect one thing from another, and in that process we seek out proper mediums.

Baker's Reflections on Learning.

Since the ladies have been left out of all meetings except parties at play, our conversation hath degenerated. Swift.

2. A congress.
Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakespeare.

3. A conventicle; an assembly of dissenters.

4. A conflux: as, the meeting of two rivers.

MEETING-HOUSE. n. f. [meeting and house.] Place where Dissenters assemble to worship.
His heart misgave him that the churches were so many meeting-houses; but I soon made him easy. Addison.

MEETLY. [from the adjective.] Fitly; properly.

MEETNESS. n. f. [from meet.] Fitness; propriety.

MEGRIM. n. f. [from Hemicranium, migrain, megrin, μειγμανία.] Disorder of the head.
In every megrim or vertigo there is an obtenebation joined with a semblance of turning round. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
There screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
Spleen sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
Pain at her side, and megrim at her head. Pope.

TO MEINE. v. a. To mingle.

MEINY. n. f. [meiniu, Saxon. See MANY.] Mesites, Fr.]
A retinue; domestick servants.
They summon'd up their meiny; strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow, and attend. Shakespeare.

MEL

MELANAGOGUES. n. f. [from μῆλαγος and ἄγος.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.

MELANCHOLICK. adj. [from melancholy.] Disordered with melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.
The king found himself in the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.
If he be mad, or angry, or melancholick, or spiteful, he will paint whatsoever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.

The commentators on old Ari-Stotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgment vary:
They to their own conceits have brought
The image of his general thought:
Just as the melancholick eye
Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.

MELANCHOLY. n. f. [melancholie, Fr. from μῆλας and χολή.]
1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundancy of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood; its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.
I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation;
nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's, which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed, the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakespeare. As you like it.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.
He protested unto them, that he had only been to seek folinary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him.
Sidney, b. ii.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor's holy Living.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;
What is it else but penury of soul,
A lazy frost, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.

MELANCHOLY. adj. [melancholique, French.]
1. Gloomy; dismal.
Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham's Sophy.
If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.

2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful; habitually dejected.
How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy. Shakespeare.
He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Lodge.

MELICERIS. n. f. [μελικερής.]
Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey; it gathers without pain, and gives way to pressure, but returns again. If the matter forming it resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a fleshy substance, steatomata. Sharp's Surgery.

MELILOT. n. f. [melilot, Fr. melilotus, Latin.] A plant.
The melilot hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empanement arises the pointal, which afterward becomes a naked capsule, that is, not hid in the empanement, as in trefoil, pregnant with one or two roundish seeds: the leaves grow by threes on the foot-stalks, and the flowers are produced in a spike. Miller.

TO MELIORATE. v. a. [meliorer, Fr. from melior.] To better; to improve.
Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.
But when we graft, or buds inoculate,
Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.
A man ought by no means to think, that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South's Sermons.
Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those beasts that suffer it. Graunt.

Much labour is requir'd in trees.
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd,
New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden's Virg.

MELIORATION. n. f. [melioration, Fr. from meliorare.] Improvement; act of bettering.
For the melioration of mankind there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite comforts, to try. Bacon.

MELIORITY. n. f. [from melior.] State of being better.
Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliority and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon's Collection of Good and Evil.

MEL

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernable ends of them, the melody above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

TO MELL. v. n. [meller, se meler, Fr.] To mix; to meddle.
Obsolete.
With fathers fits not with such things to mell. Spenser.
Here is a great deal of good matter
Lost for lack of telling.
Now I see thou dost but clatter,
Harm may come of melling. Spenser's Pastoral.

MELLIFEROUS. adj. Productive of honey. Did.

MELLIFICATION. n. f. [mellifico, Latin.] The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.
In judging of the constitution of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grasshoppers, and want of mellification in bees.
Arbutnot on Air.

MELLIFLUENCE. n. f. [mel and fluere, Latin.] A honied flow;
a flow of sweetness.

MELLIFLUIT. adj. [mel and fluere, Latin.] Flowing with mellifluous. } honey; flowing with sweetness.

A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight. Shakespeare.
As all those things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into choler and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows and repentances.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade
Of new-sprung leaves, their modulations mix Mellifluous. Thomson's Spring, l. 605.

MELLOW. adj. [mearra, soft, Saxon, Slimmer: more nearly from melle, melle, mellow, mellow; though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech.]
1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.
A form, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my leaves. Shak.
An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet.
A little longer,
And nature drops him down without your fin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm. Dryden.

2. Soft in sound.
Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his lively breath Dametas gave. Dryden.

3. Soft; unctuous.
Camomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat. Bacon.

4. Drunk; melted down with drink.
Greedy of physicians frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Roscommon.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

TO MELLOW. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.
Lord Aubrey Vere
Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shakespeare.
The royal tree hath left us royal fruits,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the feat of majesty. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grape's soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addison.

2. To soften.
They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer's Flyb.

3. To mature to perfection.
This episode is not only now the most pleasing entertainment of the Æneis, but was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.

TO MELLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen.
Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st, what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow there, we're stubborn clay. Donne.

MELLOWNESS. n. f. [from mellow.]
1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.
My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Bodley.
The Spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,
But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mature mellowness doth fet
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.

2. Maturity; full age.

MELOCOTON. n. f. [melocotone, Spanish; malum cotoneum, Latin.] A quince. Obsolete.
In apricots, peaches, or melocotones upon a wall, the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacchi.

MELODIOUS. adj. [from melody.] Musical; harmonious.
Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow, Milton.
Melodious murmur! warbling tune his praise.
And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears; Dryden.
A musick more melodious than the spheres.

MELODIOUSLY. adv. [from melodious.] Musically; harmoniously.

MELODIOUSNESS. n. f. [from melodious.] Harmoniousness;
musicalness.

MELODY. n. f. [μελωδία.] Musick; harmony of sound.
The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judged them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him for that purpose a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in publick prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of mens hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. Hooker, b. v.
Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord.
Eph. v. 19.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
And hudst with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with founds of sweetest melody. Shakespeare.
Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse. Thomson's Spring, l. 570.

MELON. n. f. [melon, Fr. melo, Latin.]
1. A plant.
The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three feminal apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.

2. The fruit.
We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely;
the cucumbers and the melons. Num. xi. 5.

MELON-THISTLE. n. f. [melocotus, Latin.]
The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance, is very succulent, and hath many angles, which are beset with sharp thorns. Miller.

TO MELT. v. a. [mylan, Saxon.]
1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.
How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me! Shakespeare.
When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil. Isa. lxiv. 2.
This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Lodge.
Will a goldsmith give one ounce and a quarter of coined silver for one ounce of bullion, when, by putting it into his melting pot, he can make it bullion? Lodge.

2. To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.
The mighty master smil'd to see That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred found to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.
Alas! thy story melts away my soul. Addison's Cato.

4. To waste away.
Thou would'st have plung'd thyself
In general riot, melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust. Shakespeare. Timon of Athens.

TO MELT. v. n.
1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.
Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psal.
The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle. L. melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Albeit, they were flesh villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakespeare.
This said; the mov'd affluents melt in tears. Dryden.
Melting

MEM

- Melting into tears, the pious man
Deplor'd to sad a sight.
3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.
Whether are they vanish'd?
Into the air: and what seem'd corporal
Melted as breath into the wind.
Beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.
4. To be subdued by affliction.
My soul melteth for heaviness: strengthen thou me.
MELTER. n. f. [from melt.] One that melts metals.
Miso and Mopla, like a couple of forefawt melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments.
This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melters, in not exhausting the ore.
MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.
Zelmiane lay upon a bank, with her face so bent over Lad-don, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought she began meltingly to be metamorphosed to the running river.
MELTLE. n. f. A kind of fish.
MELTLE. n. f. [from melt, French; membrum, Latin.]
1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.
The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things.
2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.
Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it.
3. Any part of an integral.
In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, and every part of them, should be great.
4. One of a community.
My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies.
Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade.
Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done any considerable service to their country.
MEMBRANE. n. f. [from membrum, Fr. membrana, Latin.]
A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts: the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp, the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded.
The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation,
the dam doth after tear asunder.
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix.
The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken.
MEMBRANACEOUS. adj. [from membrum, Fr. membrana, Latin.]
MEMBRANE. n. f. [from membrum, Fr. membrana, Latin.]
Lute strings, which are made of the membranous parts of the guts strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather.
Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the filly-hov.
Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or muscu-lous, but a membranous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranous stomach.
Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranous parts, are diuretic.
Birds of prey have membranous, not muscular stomachs.
MEMENTO. n. f. [Latin.] A memorial notice; a hint to awaken the memory.
Our gracious master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is still but a man, and seasonable mementos may be useful.
Is not the frequent spectacle of other peoples deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.
MEMOIR. n. f. [from memoire, French.]
1. An account of transactions familiarly written.
Be our great master's future charge
To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
High schemes of government and plans of wars.
2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

MEM

- There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected.
MEMORABLE. adj. [from memorabile, Fr. memorable, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.
Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes.
From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
Which all men have surviving fame to gain,
By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
For the that this desires doth still remain.
Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
In sight of what he durst not once defend;
But lately fled that memorable day,
When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey.
MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.
MEMORANDUM. n. f. [Latin.] A note to help the memory.
I resolved to new pave every street within the liberties, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly.
Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
Stale memorandums of the schools.
MEMORIAL. adj. [from memoria, Fr. memorialis, Latin.]
1. Prefervative of memory.
Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
And gives memorial dainties to his glove.
May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it.
The tomb with many arms and trophies raise;
There high in air memorial of my name
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame.
2. Contained in memory.
The cafe is the fame with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories.
MEMORIAL. n. f.
1. A monument; something to preserve memory.
All churches have had their names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all.
A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord.
All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writings, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage.
In other parts like deeds deserv'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought.
Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a cou-quered temptation.
Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost.
2. Hint to assist the memory.
He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons.
Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history.
MEMORIALIST. n. f. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.
I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memo-rialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord.
MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.] To record; to commit to memory by writing.
They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the fame was supported.
Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries.
MEMORY. n. f. [from memoria, Fr. memoria, Latin.]
1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.
Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight.
The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminate, when their present pasture fails.
2. Exemption

MEN

- Exemption from oblivion.
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth!
3. Time of knowledge.
Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world, and face of things, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done.
4. Memorial; monumental record.
Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worse hours:
I pry'thee put them off.
A swan in memory of Cygnus shines;
The mourning sisters weep in wat'ry signs.
5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and waffle to convince,
That memory, the warbler of the brain,
Shall be a flame.
MEN, the plural of man.
We live obscurely men know not how; or die obscurely men mark not when.
For men, there are to be considered the valour and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldiers heart.
He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war.
MEN-PLACER. n. f. [from men and placer.] One too careful to please others.
Servants be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers; but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart.
To MEN-PLACER. v. a. [from men and placer.] To threaten; to threat.
Who ever knew the heavens menace to?
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Who sent you hither?
My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.
From this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him.
What should he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menac'd if he dar'd to stay.
MENACE. n. f. [from menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.
He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last.
The Trojans view the dusty cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war.
MENACER. n. f. [from menace, Fr. from menace.] A threatener;
one that threatens.
Hence menacer! nor tempt me into rage:
This roof protects thy rashness. But begone!
MENAGE. n. f. [French.] A collection of animals.
I saw here the largest menage that I met with any-where.
MENAGOGUE. n. f. [from menage and gogue.] A medicine that promotes the flux of the menses.
To MEND. v. a. [from mend, Latin.]
1. To repair from breach or decay.
They gave the money to the workmen to repair and mend
the house.
2. To correct; to alter for the better.
The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives and manners of the persons who composed it.
You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to master his timoroussness, and mend the weakness of his constitution.
Though in some lands the graft is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit.
Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended.
3. To help; to advance.
Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others: and he that is helped takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong.
If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recur to the punctum fans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration.
4. To improve; to increase.
Death comes not at call; justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries.
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place.
He saw the monster mend his pace, he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings.
To MEND. v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good;
to be changed for the better.

MEN

- Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults—but when wou'd poets mend?
ME'NDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.
ME'NDACITY. n. f. [from mendax, Latin.] Falsehood.
In this delivery there were additional mendacities; for the commandment forbid not to touch the fruit, and positively said, Ye shall surely die; but she, extenuating, replied, Left ye die.
ME'NDER. n. f. [from mend.] One who makes any change for the better.
What trade art thou? A trade that I may use with a safe conscience; a mender of bad soils.
ME'NDICANT. adj. [from mendicant, Latin.] Begging; poor to a state of beggary.
Be not righteous over-much, is applicable to those who,
out of an excess of zeal, practise mortifications, whereby they macerate their bodies; or to those who voluntarily reduce themselves to a poor, and perhaps mendicant, state.
ME'NDICANT. n. f. [from mendicant, Fr.] A beggar; one of some begging fraternity in the Romish church.
To ME'NDICATE. v. a. [from mendicare, Lat. mendier, Fr.] To beg;
to ask alms.
ME'NDICITY. n. f. [from mendicare, Lat. mendicité, Fr.] The life of a beggar.
MENDS for amends.
Let her be as she is: If she be fair, 'tis the better for her;
and if she be not, she has the mends in her own hands.
MENIAL. adj. [from menial or menial; menial, Saxon, or meine, old French.]
1. Belonging to the retinue, or train of servants.
Two menial dogs before their master prefd;
Thus clad, and guarded thus, he seeks his kingly guest.
2. Swift seems not to have known the meaning of this word.
The women attendants perform only the most menial offices.
MENIAL. n. f. One of the train of servants.
MENINGES. n. f. [from meninx, Latin.] The meninges are the two membranes that envelope the brain, which are called the pia mater and dura mater; the latter being the exterior involucre, is, from its thickness, so denominated.
The brain being exposed to the air groweth fluid, and is thrust forth by the contraction of the meninges.
MENOLOG. n. f. [from menologion, French.] A register of months.
In the Roman martyrology we find, at one time, many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian: the menology saith they were twenty thousand.
MENOW. n. f. commonly menow. A fish.
MENSA. adj. [from mensa, Latin.] Belonging to the table; transacted at table. A word yet scarcely naturalised.
Conversation either mental or mensal.
MENSTRUAL. adj. [from menstruus, Fr. menstruus, Latin.]
1. Monthly; happening once a month; lasting a month.
She turns all her globe to the sun, by moving in her menstrual orb, and enjoys night and day alternately, one day of her's being equal to about fourteen days and nights of ours.
2. Pertaining to a menstruum. [from menstruus, Fr.]
The distents of the menstrual or strong waters hinder the incorporation, as well as those of the metal.
MENSTRUOUS. adj. [from menstruus, Lat.] Having the catamenia.
O thou of late belov'd,
Now like a menstrual woman art remov'd.
Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstrual eruptions.
MENSTRUUM. n. f. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chemists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]
All liquors are called menstruums which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, de-coction.
Inquire what is the proper menstrual to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrual will dissolve any metal.
White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in the menstrual they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent.
MENSTRUALITY. n. f. [from menstruus, French.] Capacity of being measured.
ME'NSURABLE. adj. [from mensura, Latin.] Measurable; that may be measured.
We measure our time by law and not by nature. The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily mensurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks or days.

MER

ME'NSURAL, adj. [from mensura, Latin.] Relating to measure.
TO ME'NSURATE, v. a. [from mensura, Latin.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.
MENSURA'TION, n. f. [from mensura, Lat.] The act or practice of measuring; result of measuring.
 After giving the mensuration and argumentation of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate.
ME'NTAL, adj. [mentis, French; mentis, Lat.] Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power
 This eye shoots forth? How big imagination Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture
 One might interpret.
 So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
 Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental light,
 That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,
 Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
 The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a very great conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for where the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them.

Of placid forms, and mental powers.
 Those inward representations of spirit, thought, love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging especially to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them.

ME'NTALLY, adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body.

ME'NTION, n. f. [mention, Fr. mentie, Latin.] Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee; and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house.

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity.

TO ME'NTION, v. a. [mentioner, Fr. from the noun.] To write or express in words or writing.

I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord.

These mentioned by their names were princes in their families.

The rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat are written in the book of Jehu, who is mentioned in the book of Kings.

All his transgressions shall not be mentioned.

METH'ICAL, adj. [mephitis, Lat.] Ill favoured; stinking. Mephitical exhalations are poisonous or noxious steams issuing out of the earth, from what cause soever.

MERA'CIOUS, adj. [meracius, Latin.] Strong; racy.

MER'CALE, adj. [mercor, Lat.] To be sold or bought.

MER'CANANT, n. f. [mercantite, Ital.] This word in Shakespeare seems to signify a foreigner, or foreign trader.

What is he?
 — A mercantant, or else a pedant.

I know not what but formal in apparel.

MER'CANILE, adj. Trading; commercial.

The expedition of the Argonauts was partly mercantile, partly military.

Let him travel and fulfil the duties of the military or mercantile life; let prosperous or adverse fortune call him to the most distant parts of the globe, still let him carry on his knowledge, and the improvement of his soul.

MER'CAT, n. f. [mercatus, Latin.] Market; trade.

With irresistible majesty and authority our Saviour removed the exchange, and drove the mercato out of the temple.

MER'CATORE, n. f. [mercatura, Latin.] The practice of buying and selling.

MER'CNARINESS, n. f. [from mercenary.] Venality; respect to hire or reward.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a resigned, believing soul is likely to be guilty of; if fear itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of men's actions.

MERCENARY, adj. [mercenaire, Fr. mercenarius, Lat.] Venal; hired; sold for money; acting only for hire.

Most mercies of women Wyden hight,
 Her other son fast sleeping did oppress,
 And with most cruel hand him murdered pitiless.

The foe is mercies, and will not pity.

MER

I still must own a mercenary mind.

MERCENARY, n. f. [mercenaire, Fr.] A hireling; one retained or serving for pay.

He a poor mercenary serves for bread;
 For all his travel, only cloth'd and fed.

MERCER, n. f. [mercior, French.] One who sells silks.

The draper and mercer may measure religion as they please, and the weaver may call her upon what loom he pleases.

MERCERY, n. f. [mercerie, Fr. from mercier.] Trade of mercers; dealing in silks.

The mercery is gone from out of Lombard-street and Cheapside into Paternoster-row and Fleet-street.

MERCHANDISE, n. f. [marchandise, French.] Trade of merchants; commerce; trade.

If a son, that is sent by his father about merchandise, fall into some lewd action, his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father.

If he pay thee to the utmost farthing, thou hast forgiven nothing: it is merchandise, and not forgiveness, to restore him that does as much as you can require.

Wares; any thing to be bought or sold.

Fair when her breast, like a rich laden bark
 With precious merchandise, the forth doth lay.

Thou shalt not sell her at all for money; thou shalt not make merchandise of her.

As for any merchandise you have brought, ye shall have your return in merchandise or in gold.

So active a people will always have money, whilst they can find what merchandise they please to Mexico.

TO MERCHANDISE, v. n. To trade; to traffick; to exercise commerce.

The Phoenicians, of whose exceeding merchandising we read so much in ancient histories, were Canaanites, whose very name signifies merchants.

MERCHANT, n. f. [marchand, French.] One who trafficks to remote countries.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
 Our merchants goods at Bourdeaux.

The Lord hath given a commandment against the merchant city to destroy the strong holds thereof.

The most celebrated merchants in the world were situated in the island of Tyre.

MERCHANTLY, adj. [from merchant.] Like a merchant.

MERCHANTLIKE, adj. [from merchant and like.] Like a merchant.

MERCHANT-MAN, n. f. [merchant and man.] A ship of trade. Pirates have fair winds and a calm sea, when the just and peaceful merchant-man hath them.

In the time of Augustus and Tiberius, the southern coasts of Spain sent great fleets of merchant-men to Italy.

MERCHANTABLE, adj. [mercabilis, Lat. from merchant.] Fit to be bought or sold.

Why they placed this invention in the beaver, beside the medical and merchantable commodity of castor, or parts conceived to be bitten away, might be the sagacity of that animal.

MERCIABLE, adj. [from mercy.] This word in Spenser signifies merciful.

Nought but well mought him beight:
 He is so meek, wife, merciable,

And with his word his work is conveyable.

MER'CIFUL, adj. [mercy and full.] Compassionate; tender; kind; unwilling to punish; willing to pity and spare.

Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people thou hast redeemed.

MER'CIFULNESS, n. f. [from merciful.] Tenderness; willingness to spare.

The band that ought to knit all these excellencies together is a kind of mercifulness to such a one, as is in his soul devoted to such perfections.

Use the means ordinary and lawful, among which mercifulness and liberality is one, to which the promise of secular wealth is made frequently made.

MER'CLESS, adj. [from mercy.] Void of mercy; pitiless; hard hearted; cruel; severe.

His mother mercies,
 Most mercies of women Wyden hight,
 Her other son fast sleeping did oppress,
 And with most cruel hand him murdered pitiless.

The foe is mercies, and will not pity.

MER

Think not their rage so desperate t' essay
 An element more mercies than they.

So mercies a tyrant to obey!

Whatever ravages a mercies distemper may commit, the shall have one man as much her admirer as ever.

The torrent mercies imbibes Commotions, perquillities, and bribes.

MERC'LESSLY, adv. [from mercies.] In a manner void of pity.

MERC'LESSNESS, n. f. [from mercies.] Want of pity.

MERC'RIAL, adj. [mercurialis, Lat.] Trade of mercury; formed under the influence of mercury; active; sprightly.

I know the shape of 's leg: This is his hand,
 His foot mercerial, his martial thigh,
 The brawns of Hercules.

This youth was such a mercurial, as could make his own party, if at any time he chanced to be out.

Tully considered the dispositions of a sincere, more ignorant, and less mercurial nation, by dwelling on the pathetic part.

MERCURY, n. f. [mercurius, Latin.] The chemist's name for quicksilver is mercury.

The gall of animals and mercury kill worms; and the water in which mercury is boiled has this effect.

MERCURY, n. f. [mercury, Saxon.] The act of mixing any thing with quicksilver.

I add the ways of mercification.

wards, seemed to form a throne for the majesty of God, who in scripture is represented as sitting between the cherubims, and the ark was his footstool: it was from hence that God gave his oracles to Moses, or to the high-priest that consulted him.

Make a mercy-seat of pure gold.

MERE, adj. [merus, Latin.] That or this only; such and nothing else; this only.

This avarice
 Strikes deeper, grows with more pernicious root Than Summer-teeming lust; and it hath been
 The sword of our slain kings; yet do not fear, Scotland hath fountains to fill up your will
 Of your mere own.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
 Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
 To feed my means.

The mere Irish were not admitted to the benefit of the laws of England, until they had purchased charters of denization.

From mere success nothing can be concluded in favour of any nation upon whom it is bestowed.

What if the head, the eye, or ear repin'd,
 To serve mere engines to the ruling mind.

Let Eastern tyrants from the light of heav'n
 Seclude their bosom slaves, meanly possess'd
 Of a mere, lifeless, violated form.

MERE or mers, whether in the beginning, middle, or end, always signify the same with the Saxon mere, a pool or lake.

I may say nothing of meres stored both with fish and fowl.

A boundary.

The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but it is the unjust judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, who defineth amis of lands.

MERELY, adv. [from mere.] Simply; only; thus and no other way; for this and for no other end or purpose.

Which thing we ourselves would grant, if the use thereof had been merely and only mystical.

These external manners of laments
 Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
 That swells with silence in the tortur'd soul.

It is below reasonable creatures to be conversant in such diversions as are merely innocent, and have nothing else to recommend them.

Above a thousand bought his almanack merely to find what he said against me.

Prize not your life for other ends
 Than merely to oblige your friends.

MERETRICIOUS, adj. [meretricius, meretrix, Latin.] Whorish; such as is practised by prostitutes; alluring by false show.

Our degenerate understandings having suffered a sad divorce from their dearest object, defile themselves with every meretricious semblance, that the variety of opinion presents them with.

Not by affected, meretricious arts,
 But strict harmonious symmetry of parts.

MERETRICIOUSLY, adv. [from meretricious.] Whorishly; after the manner of whores.

MERETRICIOUSNESS, n. f. [from meretricious.] False allurement like those of trumpets.

MERIDIAN, n. f. [meridian, French; meridian, Lat.] 1. Noon; mid-day.

He promis'd in his East a glorious race,
 Now sunk from his meridian, sets apace.

The line drawn from North to South, which the Sun crosses at noon.

The true meridian is a circle passing through the poles of the world, and the zenith or vertex of any place, exactly dividing the East from the West.

The Sun or Moon, rising or setting, our idea represents bigger than when on the meridian.

The particular place or state of any thing.

All other knowledge merely serves the concerns of this life, and is fitted to the meridian thereof: they are such as will be of little use to a separate soul.

The highest point of glory or power.

I've touch'd the highest point of all my greatness,
 And from that full meridian of my glory
 I haste now to my setting.

Your full majesty at once breaks forth
 In the meridian of your reign.

MERIDIAN, adj.

1. At the point of noon.

Sometimes towards Eden, which now in his view
 Lay pleasant, his griev'd look he fixes sad;

Sometimes

MER

- Sometimes tow'rd heav'n, and the full blazing Sun,
Which now sat high in his meridian tow'r. Milton.
2. Extended from North to South.
Compare the meridian line afforded by magnetical needles with one mathematically drawn, and observe the variation of the needle, or its declination from the true meridian line. Boyle.
3. Raised to the highest point.
MERIDIONAL. adj. [meridional, French.]
1. Southern.
In the southern coast of America or Africa, the southern point varieth toward the land, as being disposed that way by the meridional or proper hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Southerly; having a southern aspect.
All offices that require heat, as kitchens, stillatories, and stoves, would be meridional. Watson's Architect.
- MERIDIONALITY. n. f. [from meridional.] Position in the South; aspect towards the South.
- MERIDIONALLY. adv. [from meridional.] With a southern aspect.
The Jews, not willing to lie as their temple stood, do place their bed from North to South, and delight to sleep meridionally. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
- MERIT. n. f. [meritum, Latin; merite, French.]
1. Desert; excellence deserving honour or reward.
You have the captives; use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare, King Lear.
- She deem'd I well deserv'd to die,
And made a merit of her cruelty. Dryden.
- Recommon, not more learn'd than good,
With manners gen'rous as his noble blood;
To him the wife of Greece and Rome was known,
And ev'ry author's merit but his own. Pope.
- She valu'd nothing less Than titles, figure, shape, and drefs;
That merit should be chiefly plac'd
In judgement, knowledge, wit, and taste. Swift.
2. Reward deserved.
These laurel groves, the merits of thy youth,
Which thou from Mahomet didst greatly gain,
While bold assertor of restless truth,
Thy sword did godlike liberty maintain. Prior.
3. Claim; right.
As I am studious to promote the honour of my native country, I put Chaucer's merits to the trial, by turning some of the Canterbury tales into our language. Dryden.
- When a point hath been well examined, and our own judgment settled, after a large survey of the merits of the cause, it would be a weakness to continue fluttering. Watts.
- To MERIT. v. a. [meritor, French.]
1. To deserve; to have a right to claim any thing as deserved.
Amplify have merited of me, of all
Th' infernal empire. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
- A man at best is incapable of meriting any thing from God. South's Sermons.
2. To deserve; to earn: it is used generally of good, but sometimes of ill.
Whatsoever jewels I have merited, I am sure I have received none, unless experience be a jewel; that I have purchased at an infinite rate. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
- If such rewards to vanquish'd men are due,
What prize may Nisus from your bounty claim,
Who merited the first rewards, and fame? Dryden.
- MERITORIOUS. adj. [meritoire, Fr. from merit.] Deserving of reward; high in desert.
Instead of so great and meritorious a service, in bringing all the Irish to acknowledge the king for their liege, they did great hurt. Spenser on Ireland.
- The war that hath such a foundation will not only be reputed just, but holy and meritorious. Raleigh's Essays.
- A most sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory and meritorious death and obedience of the incarnate Son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever.
Bishop Sander's.
- This is not only the most prudent, but the most meritorious charity, which we can practice. Addison's Spect.
- MERITORIOUSLY. adv. [from meritorious.] In such a manner as to deserve reward.
He carried himself meritoriously in foreign employments in time of the interdict, which held up his credit among the patriots. Watson.
- MERITORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from meritorious.] The act or state of deserving well.
There was a full persuasion of the high meritoriousness of what they did; but still there was no law of God to ground it upon, and consequently it was not confidence. South.
- ME'RLIN. n. f. [merlin, Lat.] A kind of play. Ains.
- ME'RLIN. n. f. A kind of hawk.
Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

MER

- ME'RLAID. n. f. [mer, the sea, and maid.] A sea woman; an animal with a woman's head and fish's tail.
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall. Shakespeare.
- Thou rememberest,
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song;
Didst thou perchance Ulysses not to hear? Shakespeare.
- The mermaid's songs, which to his men did please,
That they were all persuaded, through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the sea? Dryden.
- Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid: Horace his monster, with woman's head above and fishy extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient tyrens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
- MERMAID'S TRUMPET. n. f. A kind of fish. Ains.
- MERRILY. adv. [from merry.]
1. Gaily; civilly; cheerfully; with mirth; with gaiety; with laughter.
Merrily, merrily, shall we live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough. Shakespeare.
- Yet there, merrily, I hear her singing loud. Sidney.
- Merrily by my side a royal maid,
Her dainty limbs full softly down did lay. Fairy Queen.
- To that general subjection of the land merrily the custom or tenure can be no bar nor impeachment. Spenser.
- MES'ENTERY. n. f. [mesenterion; mesenteric, Fr.] That round which the guts are convolved.
When the chyle passeth through the mesentery, it is mixed with the lymph. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- MES'ENTERIC. adj. [mesenterique, French, from mesentery.]
Relating to the mesentery.
They are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes this chylous fluid, and scours its containing vessels, which, from the mesenteric glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Chene.
- MESH. n. f. [mesche, Dutch; made, old French: it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mesh.]
The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.
The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, thorough which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- Such a hate is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cingle. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
- He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.
- With all their mouths the nerves the spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink:
These all the channel'd fibres ev'ry way,
For motion and sensation, fill convey:
The greatest portion of th' arterial blood,
By the close fracture of the parts withstood,
Whose narrow meshes stop the grosser flood. Blackmore.
- To MESH. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to en-fine.
The flies by chance mesh in her hair,
By the bright radiance thrown
From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,
They lo like diamonds shone. Dryden.
- ME'SHY. adj. [from mesh.] Reticulated; of net-work.
Some build his house, but thence his issue barre,
Some make his meshy bed, but reave his rest. Carew.

Their idle wings. Thomson.
- ME'SLIN. n. f. [from mesler, French, to mix; or rather corruptly pronounced for mesellene. See MASLIN.] Mixed corn:
as, wheat and rie.
What reason is there which should but induce, and therefore much less enforce, us to think, that care of old diffimi-litude between the people of God and the heathen nations about them, was any more the cause of forbidding them to put on garments of sundry stuff, than of charging them withal not to sow their fields with meslin. Hooker, b. iv.
- If work for the thrasher ye mind for to have,
Of wheat and of meslin unthresh'd go save. Tyffr.

vein parting every colour in the midst. Bailey.
- MES'PRISE. n. f. [probably misprinted for mesprise; mesprise, Fr.]
Contempt; scorn.
Mammon was much displeas'd, yet note he chose
But bear the rigour of his bold mesprise.
And thence him forward led, him further to entice. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

MES

- MERRYTHOUGHT. n. f. [merry and thought.] A forked bone on the body of fowls; so called because boys and girls pull in play at the two sides, the longest part broken off betoken-ing priority of marriage.
Let him not be breaking merrythoughts under the table with my cousin. Eachard's Content of the Clergy.
- MES'RA'ICK. n. f. [mesaraique; mesaraque, Fr. analogy requires it mesaraick.] Belonging to the mesentery.
It taketh leave of the permanent parts at the mouths of the mesentericks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion into the sieve.
The most subtle part of the chyle passeth immediately into the blood by the absorbent vessels of the guts, which discharge themselves into the mesaraick veins. Arbutnot.
- MES'RON. n. f. [mesro, Lat.] The act of sinking, or thrusting over head.
MESSEMS. imperfect verb. [me and seems, or it seems to me:
for this word it is now too common to use methinks or methought, an ungrammatical word.] I think; it appears to me;
methinks.
Alas, of ghosts I hear the gaffly cries;
Yet there, mesems, I hear her singing loud. Sidney.

As pure a mess almost as it came in. Pope.
- To MESS. v. n. To eat; to feed.
- ME'SSAGE. n. f. [message, Fr.] An errand; any thing committed to another to be told to a third.
She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wife do make their way,
To bear the message of her spright. Spenser, Sonnet 81.
- May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears! Shakespeare.
- She is fair, and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues; sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakespeare.
- Gently haft thou told Thy message, which might else in telling wound,
And in performing us. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
- Let the minister be low, his interest inconsiderable, the word will suffer for his sake; the message will still find reception according to the dignity of the messenger. South.
- The welcome message made, was soon receiv'd;
'Twas to be with'd and hop'd, but scarce believ'd. Dryden.
- ME'SSENGER. n. f. [messager, French.] One who carries an errand; one who comes from another to a third; one who brings an account or foretoken of any thing; an harbinger;
a forerunner.
Came running in, much like a man difmaid,
A messenger with letters, which his message said. Pa. Qu.
- Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakespeare.
- Run after that same peevish messenger,
The duke's man. Shakespeare.
- The earl dispatched messengers one after another to the king, with an account of what he heard and believed he saw; and yet thought not fit to stay for an answer. Clarendon.
- Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope.
- MESSIAH. n. f. [from the Hebrew.] The Anointed; the Christ; the Saviour of the world; the Prince of peace.
Great and publick opposition the magistrates made against Jesus the man of Nazareth, when he appeared as the Messiah. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

men.
- ME'SSMATE. n. f. [messi and mate.] One who eats at the same table.
- ME'SSUAGE. n. f. [messuagium, law Latin; formed perhaps message by mistake of the n in court-hand for u, they being written alike, message from maison, French.] The house and ground set apart for household uses.
MET, the preterite and part. of meet.
A set of very well-meaning gentlemen in England, not to be met with in other countries, take it for granted they can never be in the wrong so long as they can oppose ministers of state. Addison's Freeholder, No. 48.
- METAGRAMMATISM. n. f. [μεταγραμματισμός, Gr.] Anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named.
- METABASIS. n. f. [Greek.] In rhetoric, a figure by which the orator passes from one thing to another. Dider.
- METABOLA. n. f. [μεταβολή, Gr.] In medicine, a change of time, air, or disease.

the carpus to the metacarpus. Wise's Surgery.
- METACARPAL. adj. [from metacarpus.] Belonging to the me-tacarpus. Dider.
- It will facilitate the separation in the joint, when you cut the finger from the metacarpal bone. Sharp's Surgery.
- METAL. n. f. [metal, French; metallum, Latin.]
We understand by the term metal a firm, heavy, and hard substance, opaque, fusible by fire, and concreting again when cold.

MET

cold into a solid body such as it was before, which is malleable under the hammer, and is of a bright, glossy, and glittering substance where newly cut or broken. The metals are six in number: 1. gold; 2. silver; 3. copper; 4. tin; 5. iron; and, 6. lead; of which gold is the heaviest, lead the second in weight, then silver, then copper, and iron is the lightest except tin: some have added mercury or quicksilver to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi-metals.
Hill's Mat. Med.

Metallists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out.
Maxon.

2. Courage; spirit. In this sense it is more frequently written mettle. See METTLÉ.

Being glad to find their companions had so much metals, after a long debate the major part carried it.
Clarendon.

3. Upon this signification the following ambiguity is founded.

Both kinds of metal be prepar'd,
Either to give blows or to ward;
Courage and feel both of great force,
Prepar'd for better or for worse.
Hudibras, p. i.

METALÉPSIS. n. f. [μετάληψις.] A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations.
Bailey.

METALLICAL. adj. [from metallum, Lat. metallique, French.] METALLICK. adj. Partaking of metal; containing metal; consisting of metal.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or fulfibility, seem to have resolved it to nobler use; an art now utterly lost.
Watson's Architecture.

The lofty lines abound with endless store
Of min'ral treasure, and metallick oar.
Blackmore.

METALLIFEROUS. adj. [from metallum and fero, Latin.] Producing metals.
Ditt.

METALLINE. adj. [from metal.]
1. Impregnated with metal.

Metallic waters have virtual cold in them; put therefore wood or clay into smith's water, and try whether it will not harden.
Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 84.

2. Consisting of metal.

Though the quicksilver were brought to a very close and lovely metalline cylinder, not interrupted by interspersed bubbles, yet having caused the air to be again drawn out of the receiver, several little bubbles disclosed themselves.
Boyle.

METALLIST. n. f. [from metal; metalliste, Fr.] A worker in metals; or skilled in metals.

Metalists use a kind of terrace in their vessels for fining metals, that the melted metal run not out; it is made of quick lime and ox blood.
Maxon's Mech. Exercises.

METALLOGRAPHY. n. f. [from metallum and γραφω.] An account or description of metals.
Ditt.

METALLURGIST. n. f. [from metallum and ργον.] A worker in metals.

To METAMORPHOSE. v. a. [from metamorphosis, Fr. μεταμορφώω.] To change the form or shape of any thing.

Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me;
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time.
Shakespeare.

They became degenerate and metamorphos'd like Nebuchadnezzar, who, though he had the face of a man, had the heart of a beast.
Davies on Ireland.

The impossibility to conceive so great a prince and favourite to suddenly metamorphos'd into travellers, with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses.
Watson's Buckingham.

From such rude principles our form began;
And earth was metamorphos'd into man.
Dryden's Ovid.

METAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [from metamorphosis, Fr. μεταμορφωσις.] 1. Transformation; change of shape.

His whole oration flood upon a short narration, what was the cause of this metamorphosis.
Sidney.

Obscene talk is grown so common, that one would think we were fallen into an age of metamorphosis, and that the brutes did not only poetically but really speak.
Gov. Tongue.

The fifteenth book is the master-piece of the whole metamorphosis.
Dryden.

What! my noble colonel in metamorphosis! On what occasion are you transformed?
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

There are probable machines in epick poems, where the gods are no less actors than the men; but the less credible sorts, such as metamorphoses, are far more rare.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is applied, by Harvey, to the changes an animal undergoes, both in its formation and growth; and by several to the various shapes some insects in particular pass through, as the silk-worm, and the like.
Quincy.

METAPHOR. n. f. [from metaphora, Fr. métaphore.] The application of a word to an use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put: as, he bridles his anger; he deadens the found; the spring awakes the flowers. A metaphor is a simile comprized in a word; the spring putting in action the powers of vegetation, which were torpid in the winter, as the powers of a sleeping animal are excited by awaking him.

MET

The work of tragedy is on the passions, and in a dialogue; both of them abhor strong metaphors, in which the epocœa delights.
Dryden's Ded. to Virgil's Æneid.

METAPHORICAL. adj. [from metaphor, Fr. métaphorique.] METAPHORICK. adj. Not literal; not according to the primitive meaning of the word; figurative.

The words which were to continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use.
Hobbes.

METAPHRA'SE. n. f. [μετάφρασις.] A mere verbal translation from one language into another.
Hobbes.

This translation is not so loose as paraphrase, nor so close as metaphrase.
Dryden.

METAPHRAST. n. f. [from metaphrase, Fr. métaphraste.] A literal translator; one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICAL. adj. METAPHYSICK. adj. 1. Verified in metaphysics; relating to metaphysics.

2. In Shakespeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

He thee hither,
To chaff with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate, and metaphysical aid, doth seem
To have crown'd thee withal.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

METAPHYSICK. n. f. [from metaphysique, Fr. métaphysique.] METAPHYSICKS. s. tology; the doctrine of the general affections of substances existing.

The mathematics and the metaphysics,
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves you.
Shakespeare.

Call her the metaphysics of her sex,
And say she tortures wits, as quartsans vex Physicians.
Cleaveland.

If light be caused by intrinission, or receiving in, the form of contrary species should be received confusedly together, which how absurd it is, Aristotle shews in his metaphysics.
Peacham on Drawing.

See physick beg the Stagyrice's defence!
See metaphysick call for aid on sense!
Pope's Danield.

The topics of ontology or metaphysick, are cause, effect, action, passion, identity, opposition, subject, adjunct, and sign.

METAPHYSICS. n. f. [μετάφυσικα.] Transformation; metamorphosis.

Harvey on Consumption.

METATARSAL. adj. [from metatarsus.] Belonging to the metatarsus.

The bones of the toes, and part only of the metatarsal bones, may be carious, in which case cut off only so much of the foot as is disordered.
Sharp's Surgery.

METATARSUS. n. f. [μετάταρσος.] The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot.
Ditt.

The conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining the tarsus to the metatarsus.
Wiseham's Surgery.

METATHESIS. n. f. [μετάθεσις.] A transposition.

To METE. v. a. [μετέω, Latin.] To measure; to reduce to measure.

I will divide Shechem, and mete the valley of Succoth. Psal.
To measure any distance by a line, apply some known measure wherewith to mete it.
Heldr.

Though you many ways pursue
To find their lengths, you'll never mete the true,
But thus; take all that space the sun
Meets out, when every daily round is run.
Creech.

METEWAND. n. f. [μετέω and wand.] A staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

A true touchstone, a sure metewand lieth before their eyes.
Achan's Schoolmaster.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in meteward, weight, or measure.
Lev. xix. 35.

To METEMPSYCHO'SE. v. a. [from metempsychosis.] To translate from body to body. A word not received.

The souls of usurers after their death, Lucian affirms to be metempsychos'd, or translated into the bodies of asses, and be metempsychos'd, for poor men to take their pennyworth out of their bones.
Peacham on Blazoning.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. n. f. [μετεμψύχωσις.] The transmigration of souls from body to body.

From the opinion of metempsychosis, or transmigration of the souls of men into the bodies of beasts, most suitable under their human condition, after his death Orpheus the musician became a swan.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

METEOR. n. f. [μετέωρος, Fr. météore.] Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux and transitory nature.

MET

Look'd he or red, or pale, or sad, or merrily?
What observation mad'st thou in this case?
Shakespeare.

Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?
She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star must rise upon the horizon of Ireland; for there had the like meteor strong influence before.
Bacon's Henry VII.

These burning fits but meteors be,
Whole matter in thee soon is pent:
Thy beauty, and all parts which are in thee,
Are an unchangeable firmament.
Donne.

Then flaming meteors, hung in air, were seen,
And thunders rattled through a sky serene.
Dryden's Æn.

Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward
To be trod out by Cæsar?
Dryden's All for Love.

O poet, thou hadst been disreputeer,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
Which did but blaze, and rove, and die.
Prior.

METEOROLOGICAL. adj. [from meteorology.] Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

Many others are considerable in meteorological divinity.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

Make distinction whether these unusual lights be new-come guests, or old inhabitants in heaven, or meteorological impressions not transcribing the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies.
Hovel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOGIST. n. f. [from meteorology.] A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

The meteorologist observe, that amongst the four elements which are the ingredients of all sublunary creatures, there is a notable correspondency.
Hovel's Vocal Forest.

METEOROLOG. n. f. [μετεωρολόγος.] The doctrine of meteors.

In animals we deny not a natural meteorology, or innate presentation of wind and weather.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

METEOROUS. adj. [from meteor.] Having the nature of a meteor.

From the o'er hill
To their first station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding metecorous, as evening mists, Ris'n from a river.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.

METER. n. f. [from meteo.] A measurer: as, a coal-meter, a land-meter.

METHEGLIN. n. f. [meddyghu, Welch, from medd and glyn, glutinare ait Minthew, vel a medley medicus & llyn potus quia potus medicinalis.] Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

White handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.
—Honey, and milk, and sugar, there is three.
—Nay then two treys; and if you grow so nice,
Metheglins, wort, and malnicity.
Shakespeare.

To ally the strength and hardness of the wine,
And with old Bacchus new metheglins join.
Dryden.

METHINKS, verb impersonal. [me and thinks.] This is imagined to be a Norman corruption, the French being apt to confound me and I. I think; it seems to me; methinks. See MESEEMS, which is more strictly grammatical, though less in use. Methinks was used even by those who used like-wise methinks.

In all ages poets have been had in special reputation, and, methinks, not without great cause; for, besides their sweet inventions, and most witty lays, they have always used to set forth the praises of the good and virtuous.
Spenser on Ireland.

If he choose out some expression which does not vitiate the sense, I suppose he may stretch his chain to such a latitude; but by innovation of thoughts, methinks, he breaks it.
Dryden.

There is another circumstance, which, methinks, gives us a very high idea of the nature of the soul, in regard to what passes in dreams, that innumerable multitude and variety of ideas which then arise in her.
Addison's Spect. No. 487.

Methinks already I your tears survey.
Pope.

METHOD. n. f. [methode, Fr. méthode.] 1. Method, taken in the largest sense, implies the placing of several things, or performing several operations in such an order as is most convenient for the attainment of some end.

To see wherein the harm which they feel consisteth, the seeds from which it sprang, and the method of curing it, belongeth to a skill the study whereof is full of toil, and the practice beset with difficulties.
Hobbes, b. v.

If you will jest with me know my aspect,
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your conscience.
Shakespeare.

It will be in vain to talk to you concerning the method I think best to be observed in schools.
Locke on Education.

Notwithstanding a faculty be born with us, there are several methods for cultivating and improving it, and without which it will be very uncertain.
Addison's Spect. No. 400.

METHODOICAL. adj. [methodique, Fr. méthodique.] Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

MET

The observations follow one another without that methodical regularity requisite in a prose author.
Addison's Spect.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them where he pleases; to us, perhaps, not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion; but, with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories.
Rogers.

Let me appear, great Sir, I pray,
Methodical in what I say.
Addison's Rosamon.

METHODOICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise.
Dryden's Du Fresnoy.

To begin methodically, I should enjoin you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object.
Suckling.

To METHODISE. v. a. [from method.] To regulate; to dispose in order.

Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge.
Dryden's Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodise his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves.
Spectator, No. 476.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic.
Addison's Spect. No. 291.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodis'd.
Pope.

METHODIST. n. f. [from method.] 1. A physician who practises by theory.

Our warriest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers.
Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterite of methinks. See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methought, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from methinks.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.
Shakespeare.

Since I fought
By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbly'd all my heart.
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild;
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy feed shall bruise our foe."
Milton.

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted fill.
Milton.

Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how.
Dryden.

METONYMICAL. adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour.

METONYMY. n. f. [metonymie, Fr. métonymie.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the materiate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

METRE. n. f. [metrum, Latin; μέτρον, Greek.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonic disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose.
Achan's Schoolmaster.

He taught his Romans in much better metre,
To laugh at fools.
Pope.

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Latin; metrique, Fr.] Pertaining to metre or numbers.

METROPOLIS. n. f. [metropolis, Latin; metropole, French; μέτρον and πόλις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glittering spires and pinnacles adorn'd.
Milton.

Reduc'd in careful watch
Round their metropolis.
Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.

We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town.
Addison on Italy.

METROPOLITAN.

MEW

METROPOLITAN. n. f. [metropolitanus, Latin.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and counteracted men of the greatest parts in learning.

METTTLE. n. f. [corrupted from mettle, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spiritlines; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?

He was quick mettle when he went to school.

I had rather go with fir priest than fir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle.

Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the feditious.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's speed, Retrain his fury, than provoke his speed;

The winged courier, like a gen'rous horse, Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

2. Substance: this at least should be mettle.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle, Whereof thy proud-child, arrogant man, is puff,

Engenders the black toad, and adder blue.

METTTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mettled dance Saw you never.

Nor would you find it easy to compose The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows

The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.

METTTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spiritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.

Their force differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse.

METTTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spiritlines.

MEW. n. f. [mue, French.]

1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where any thing is confined.

Forth-coming from her darkness meu, Where she all day did hide her hated brow,

And horribly mis-shapes with ugly sights, Captiv'd eternally in iron meus,

And darkness dens, where Titan his face never shews.

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse To touch the dainty needle or nice thread;

She hated chambers, closets, secret meus, And in broad fields prefer'd her maidenhead.

2. [Met, Saxon.] A sea-fowl.

Among the first sort we reckon coots, sanderlings, and meus.

The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side, And on her shatter'd mast the meus in triumph ride.

To MEW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.

He in dark corners meu'd, Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd.

Unto the bush her eye did fudden glance, In which vain Braggadocio was meu'd.

And saw it first.

Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend The steps of wrong, then move you to meu up

Your tender kinsman.

Fair Hermia, question your desires; Know of your youth, examine well your blood,

Whether if you yield not to your father's choice, You can endure the livery of a nun;

For aye to be in shady cloister meu'd, To live a barren sister all your life,

Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon.

More pity that the eagle should be meu'd, While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Feign them sick, Close meu'd in their sedans, for fear of air.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life meu him up in a closet, and never let him go into company.

2. To fledge the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayres, meuings, cutting, and renovation of their feathers.

MIC

The sun hath meu'd his beams from off his lamp, And majesty defac'd the royal stamp.

Nine times the moon had meu'd her horns, at length With travel weary, unsuppl'd with strength,

And with the burden of her womb oppress, Sabean fields afford her needful rest.

3. [Miauler, French.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may, The cat will meu, the dog will have his day.

They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to meu, nor a cat to bark.

To MEW. v. n. [miauler, French.] To squall as a child.

The infant *Meu*ling and puking in the nurse's arms.

MEZE'RON. n. f. A species of purple laurel.

M'CHER. n. f. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight; a hedge-creep.

Mitch or Mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow.

How tenderly her tender hands between In ivory cage she did the *mich*er bind.

Shall the blessed sun of heav'n prove a *mich*er, and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked.

M'CKLE. adj. [mice], Saxon.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This reade is rife that oftentime Great cumburs fall unlost:

In humble dales is footing fast, The trode is not so tickle,

And though one fall through heedless haste, Yet is his misf not mickle.

Many a little makes a mickle. If I to-day die with Frenchmens rage,

To-morrow I shall die with mickle age.

O, mickle is the pow'rful grace, that lies In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun, A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,

Has in his charge.

MICROCO'SM. n. f. [micro and cosmos.] The little world.

Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. She to whom this world must itself refer,

As suburbs, or the microcosm of her; She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st this,

Thou know'st how lame a creple this world is.

As in this our microcosm, the heart Heat, spirit, motions gives to every part:

So Rome's victorious influence did disperse All her own virtues through the universe.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic.

MICROGRAPHY. n. f. [micro and grapho.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernable only with a microscope.

MID

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter: a curious description and figure of the sting-see in Mr. Hook's microscopy.

MICROSCOPE. n. f. [micro and scopos, microscope, Fr.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscope, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing, to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs.

The critic eye, that microscope of wit, Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit.

MICROMETER. n. f. [micro and metron, micrometre, French.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCO'PICAL. n. f. [from microscope.]

More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white.

MID-DAY. n. f. [mid and day.] Noon; meridian.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a bush.

His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire, More dazzled and drove back his enemies,

Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.

Who have before, or shall write after thee, Their works, though roughly labour'd, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay, Or early or late twilights to mid-day.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun, And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow

In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd, Thought all their glory vain in knightly view.

MIDDELE. adj. [mesele, Saxon.]

1. Equally distant from the two extremes.

The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people; the middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues they have no sense.

A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness.

To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines.

What dulness dropt among her sons impress, Like motion, from one circle to the rest:

So from the midmost the mutation spreads Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads.

MIDNIGHT. n. f. [mid and night.] Milton seems to have accented this last syllable.] The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go to bed betimes.

How now, you secret, black and midnight hags? What is't you do?

I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in mythenous and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects.

By night he fled, and at midnight returned From compassing the earth; cautious of day.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past.

Some solitary cloister will I chuse, Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep,

Broke by the melancholy midnight bell.

In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth.

They can tell precisely what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnoon in Rome when Julius Caesar was slain.

MIDRIFT. n. f. [mid and rift, Saxon.] The diaphragm.

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities, the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles; the

MID

the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side: its fibres, from this semicircular origination, tend towards their centre, and terminate in a tendon or aponeurosis, which hath always been taken for the nervous part of the midriff. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebrae of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebrae of the loins; that on the left side is somewhat shorter; and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff, which joins its tendons with the tendon of the other, so as that they make but one membrane, or rather partition.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone
That beat out life. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

Not knowing which was mild or stale. Prior.

MILDERNAX. n. f. Cannabum nauticum.

MILDEW. n. f. [milscape, Saxon.]

Mildew is a disease that happens in plants, and is caused by a dewy moisture which falls on them, and continuing, for want of the sun's heat, to draw it up, by its acrimony corrodes, gnaws, and spoils, the inmost substance of the plant, and hinders the circulation of the nutritive sap; upon which the leaves begin to fade, and the blossoms and fruit are much prejudic'd; or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, which is frequently found in great plenty, preying upon this exudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun enough to draw it upwards to any considerable height, nor wind of force strong enough to disperse it: it condenses and falls on plants, and with its thick, clammy substance stops the pores, and by that means prevents perspiration. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concentered upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are intic'd thereto, where finding proper nutriment they deposit their eggs, and multiply so fast as to cover the whole surfaces of the plants, and, by corroding the vessels, prevent the motion of the sap. It is observable, that whenever a tree has been greatly affected by this mildew, it seldom recovers it in two or three years, and many times never is intirely clear from it after. Hill.

Down fell the mildew of his fuged words. Fairfax.

The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.

Soon blasting mildew black'ned all the grain. Dryden.

It turns in less than two nights. Shakespeare.

This milky gentleness and course of yours,
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness. Shakespeare, King Lear.

MILKY-WAY. n. f. [milky and way.] The galaxy.

The milky-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopic observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned. It passes through the constellations of Cassiopeia, Cygnus, Aquila, Perseus, Andromeda, part of Ophiucus and Gemini, in the northern hemisphere; and in the southern it takes in part of Scorpio, Sagittarius, Centaurus, the Argo Navis and the Ara. The galaxy hath usually been the region in which new stars have appeared; as that in Cassiopeia, which was seen in A. D. 1572; that in the breast of the Swan, and another in the knee of Serpentarius; which have appeared for a while, and then become invisible again. Harris.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies to find the milky-way: Creech's Manilius.

It forcibly intrudes upon our sight.
How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us
Some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

MILLINER. n. f. [I believe from Milaner, an inhabitant of Milan, as a Lombard is a banker.] One who sells ribbands and dresses for women.

He was perfumed like a milliner;
And, 'twixt his finger and his thumb, he held
A pouncet box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. i.

The mercers and milliners complain of her want of public spirit. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 52.

MILLION. n. f. [million, Fr. milliogne, Italian.]
1. The number of an hundred myriads, or ten hundred thousand.

Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers. Shakespeare.

2. A proverbial name for any very great number.
That the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones, is a truth more evident than many of those propositions that go for principles; and yet there are millions who know not this at all. Locke.

There are millions of truths that a man is not concerned to know. Locke.

She found the polish'd glass, whose small convex
Enlarges to ten millions of degrees
The mite, invisible else. Philips.

Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd;
And glad all heav'n with millions thou hast sav'd. Prior.

MILLIONTH. adj. [from million.] The ten hundred thousandth.

The first embryo of an ant is supposed to be as big as that of an elephant; which nevertheless can never arrive to the millionth part of the other's bulk. Bentley's Sermons.

MILLSTONE. n. f. [mill and stone.] The stone by which corn is comminuted.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge. Deut. xxiv. 6.

Æolus's beasts saw farther into a millstone than our mobile. L'Estrange's Fables.

MILT. n. f. [mildt, Dutch.]
1. The sperm of the male fish.

You shall scarce take a carp without a melt, or a female without a roe or spawn. Walton's Angler.

2. [Milt, Saxon.] The spleen.

To MILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To impregnate the roe or spawn of the female fish.

MILTER. n. f. [from milt.] The he of any fish, the she being called spawner.

The spawner and milter labour to cover their spawn with sand. Walton's Angler.

MILTWORK. n. f. An herb. Anf.

MIME. n. f. [mime, Fr. mime; mimus, Latin.] A buffoon who practises gesticulations, either representative of some action, or merely contrived to raise mirth.

Think't thou, mime, this is great? Benj. Johnson.

To MIME. v. n. To play the mime.

Think't thou, mime, this is great? or that they strive Whole noise shall keep thy miming most alive,
Whilst thou dost raise some player from the grave,
Out-dance the babion, or out-boast the brave. B. Johnson.

MIMER. n. f. [from mime.] A mimick; a buffoon.

Jugglers and dancers, antics, mummers, mimers. Milton's Samson Agonistes.

MIMICAL. adj.

MIN

MIMICKRY. n. f. [from mimick.] Burlesque imitation.
By an excellent faculty in mimickry, my correspondent tells me he can assume my air, and give my taciturnity a slyness which diverts more than any thing I could say. Speilator.

MIMOGRAPHER. n. f. [mimus and γραφω.] A writer of farces. Diſt.

MINACIOUS. adj. [minax, Lat.] Full of threats.

MINACITY. n. f. [from minax, Latin.] Disposition to use threats.

MINATORY. adj. [minor, Latin.] Threatening.
The king made a statute minatory and minatory, towards justices of peace, that they should duly execute their office, inviting complaints against them. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO MINCE. v. a. [contracted, as it seems, from minish, or from mincer; mince, French, small.]
1. To cut into very small parts.
She saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport,
In mincing with his sword her husband's limbs. Shakeſp.
With a good chopping-knife mince the two capons as small as ordinary minced meat. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
What means the service of the church so imperfectly, and by halves, read over? What makes them mince and mangle that in their practice, which they could swallow whole in their subscriptions? South's Sermons.
Revive the wits;
But murder first, and mince them all to bits. Dunciad.
2. To mention any thing scrupulously, by a little at a time; to palliate; to extenuate.
I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say I love you. Shakeſp.'s Henry V.
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,
And mince it. Shakeſp. Timon of Athens.
Behold yon simpering dame, whose face between her forks prefages snow; that minces virtue, and does shake the head to hear of pleasure's name. Shakeſp. King Lear.
Iago,
Making it light to Cassio.
These gifts,
Saving your mincing, the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.
I'll try to force you to your duty:
For so it is, howe'er you mince it,
Ere we part, I shall evince it. Hydibras, p. ii.
Siren; now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase.
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
If, to mince his meaning, I had either omitted some part of what he said, or taken from the strength of his expression,
I certainly had wronged him. Dryden.
These, seeing no where water enough to effect a general deluge, were forced to mince the matter, and make only a partial one of it, restraining it to Asia. Woodward.

TO MINCE. v. n.
1. To walk nicely by short steps; to act with appearance of scrupulousness and delicacy; to affect nicety.
By her side did sit the bold Saniloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy. Fairy Queen.
I'll turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakeſp. Merchant of Venice.
A harlot form soft sliding by,
With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye. Dunciad.
2. To speak small and imperfectly.
The reeve, miller, and cook, are as much distinguished from each other, as the mincing lady prioreſs and the broad-speaking wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables.

MINCEFULLY. adv. [from mince.] In small parts; not fully.
Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed, and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker, b. i.

MIND. n. f. [gemine, Saxon.]
1. The intelligent power.
I am a very foolish, fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakeſp. King Lear.
This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding: which word, mind, we use also for opinion; as, I am of this or that mind: and sometimes for mens conditions or virtues; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind: sometimes for affection; as, I do this for my mind's sake: sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse: oftentimes for spirits, angels, and intelligences; but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passive, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to his first object: or more at large thus; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be delivered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

MIN

2. Liking; choice; inclination; propension; affection.
Our question is, whether all be in which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds without affecting counsel of God. Hooker, b. ii.
We will consider of your suit:
And come some other time to know our mind. Shakeſp.
Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind.
I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakeſp.
Be of the same mind one towards another. Rom. xii. 16.
Hast thou a wife after thy mind? forlake her not. Eachſ.
They had a mind to French Britain; but they have let fall their bit. Bacon's War with Spain.
Sudden mind arose
In Adam, net to let th' occasion pass,
Given him by this great conference, to know
Of things above this world. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. v.
Walker coasted on the other side of the river, but at such a distance that he had no mind to be engaged. Clarendon.
He had a great mind to do it. Clarendon.
All the arguments to a good life will be very insignificant to a man that hath a mind to be wicked, when remission of sins may be had upon such cheap terms. Tillotson's Sermons.
Suppose that after eight years peace he hath a mind to infringe any of his treaties, or invade a neighbouring state, what opposition can we make? Addison.

3. Thoughts; sentiments.
Th' ambiguous god,
In these mysterious words, his mind expreſt,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

4. Opinion.
The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook. Shakeſp.
These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space. Locke.
The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Graville.

5. Memory; remembrance.
The king knows their disposition; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
When he brings
Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xi.
These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.
The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path diſus'd was out of mind. Dryden.
They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury's Sermons.
A wholesome law time out of mind;
Had been confirm'd by fate's decree. Swift's Miſcel.

TO MIND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To mark; to attend.
His mournful plight is swallowed up unware,
Forgetful of his own that minds another's cares. Fa. Q.
Not then mistrust, but tender love enjoins,
That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou me! Milton.
If, in the raving of a frantick muse,
And *mind*ing more his verses than his way,
Any of these should drop into a well. Rescommen.
Cease to request me; let us mind our way;
Another song requires another day. Dryden.
He is daily called upon by the word, the ministers, and inward suggestions of the holy spirit, to attend to those prophecies, and mind the things that belong to his peace. Rogers.

2. To put in mind; to remind.
Let me be punished, that have *mind*ed you
Of what you should forget. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.
I desire to mind those persons of what Saint Austin hath said. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
This mind me of a cobbling colonel of famous memory.
I shall only mind him, that the contrary supposition, if it could be proved, is of little use. Locke.

TO MIND. v. n. To incline; to be disposed.
When one of them mindeth to go into rebellion, he will convey away all his lordships to scoundrels in trust. Spryſer.

MIN

MIND'D. adj. [from mind.] Disposed; inclined; affected.
We come to know
How you stand *mind*ed in the weighty diff'rence Between the king and you. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.
Whose fellowship therefore unmeet for thee,
Good reason was thou freely should'st dislike,
And be so *mind*ed still. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. viii.
If men were *mind*ed to live virtuously, to believe a God would be no hindrance to any such design, but very much for its advancement. Tillotson's Sermons.
Pyrrhus is nobly *mind*ed; and I fain
Would live to thank him. Philips.

MINDFUL. adj. [mind and full.] Attentive; having memory.
I acknowledge the usefulness of your directions, and I promise you to be *mind*ful of your admonitions. Hammond.

MINDFULLY. adv. [from mindful.] Attentively.

MINDFULNESS. n. f. [from mindful.] Attention; regard.

MINDLESS. adj. [from mind.]
1. Inattentive; regardless.
Curſed Athens, *mind*less of thy worth,
Forget now thy great deeds, when neighbour states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them. Shakeſp.
As the strong eagle in the silent wood,
*Mind*less of warlike rage, and hostile care,
Plays round the rocky cliff, or crystal flood. Prior.
2. Not endued with a mind; having no intellectual powers.
Pronounce thee a gross lowly, a *mind*less slave,
Or else a hovering temporizer. Shakeſp. Winter's Tale.
God first made angels bodiless, pure, *mind*less;
Then other things, which *mind*less bodies be:
Last, he made man. Dacier.

MIND-STRIKEN. adj. [mind and stricken.] Moved; affected in his mind.
He had been so mind-stricken by the beauty of virtue in that noble king, though not born his subject, he ever professed himself his servant. Sidney, b. ii.

MINE. pronoun possessive. [myn, Saxon; mein, German;
mien, French; meus, Latin.] It was anciently the practice to use my before a consonant and mine before a vowel, which euphony still requires to be observed. Mine is always used when the substantive precedes: as, this is my cat; this cat is mine.
The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. Shakeſp.'s Macbeth.
Thou art a foul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakeſp. King Lear.
When a wife man gives thee better counsel, give me mine.
If thou be't slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakeſp.
A friend of mine is come to me, and I have nothing to set before him. Luke xi. 6.
That palm is mine. Dryden.

MINE. n. f. [mine, French; muyn or mun, Welsh, from maen, lapis, in the plural mini.]
1. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals or minerals.
Though freighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine. Waller.
A workman, to avoid idleness, worked in a groove or mine- pit therabouts, which was little esteemed. Boyle.
A mine-digger may meet with a gem, which he knows not what to make of. Boyle.
The heedless mine-man aims only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible. Boyle.
2. A cavern dug under any fortification that it may sink for want of support, or, in modern war, that powder may be lodged in it, which being fired at a proper time, whatever is over it may be blown up and destroyed.
By what eclipse shall that sun be defac'd?
What mine hath erst thrown down so fair a tower?
What sacrilege hath such a saint disgrac'd? Sidney, b. ii.
Build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down, and fill up the mines that you have digg'd. Whitgift.
Others to a city strong
Lay siege, encamp'd; by batt'ry, scale and mine, Assaulting. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. xi.
TO MINE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dig mines or burrows;
to form any hollows underground.
The ranging stoik in stately beeches dwells;
The climbing goats on hills securely feed;
The mining conies shroud in rocky cells.
Of this various matter the terrestrial globe consists, from its surface down to the greatest depth we ever dig or mine.
Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.
TO MINE. v. a. To sap; to ruin by mines; to destroy by flow degrees, or secret means.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
While rank corruption mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakeſp.'s Hamlet.

MIN

They mined the walls, laid the powder, and rammed the mouth; but the citizens made a countermine. Hayward.
The flow fever mines the constitution. Bolingbroke.

MINER. n. f. [mineur, Fr. from mine.]
1. One that digs for metals.
By me kings palaces are push'd to ground,
And miners crush'd beneath their mines are found. Dryden.
2. One who makes military mines.
As the bombardier levels his mischief at cities, the miner buries himself in ruining private houses. Tatler.

MINERAL. n. f. [minerals, Lat.] Fossile body; matter dug out of mines. All metals are minerals, but all minerals are not metals.
She did confess, she had
For you a mortal mineral, which, being took,
Should by the minute seed on life, and ling'ring
By inches waste you. Shakeſp.'s Cymbeline.
The minerals of the kingdom, of lead, iron, copper, and tin, are of great value. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth
Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton's Par. Loſt.
Minerals; nitre with vitriol; common salt with alum; and sulphur with vitriol. Woodward.

MINERAL. adj. Consisting of fossile bodies.
By experience upon bodies in any mine, a man may conjecture at the metallick or mineral ingredients of any mass found there. Woodward's Nat. Hiſt.

MINERALIST. adj. [from mineral.] One skilled or employed in minerals.
A mine-digger may meet with a gem or a mineral, which he knows not what to make of till he shews it a jeweller or a mineralist. Boyle.
The metals and minerals which are lodged in the perpendicular intervals do still grow, to speak in the mineralist's phrase, or receive additional increase. Woodward.

MINERALOGIST. n. f. [mineralogie, French; from mineral and λογος.] One who discourses on minerals.
Many authors deny it, and the exactest mineralogists have rejected it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.

MINERALOGY. n. f. [from mineral and λογος.] The doctrine of minerals.
MINER. n. f. A skin with specks of white. Ains.
TO MINGLE. v. a. To mix; to join; to compound; to unite with something so as to make one mass.
Wo unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to minge strong drink. Iſa. v. 22.
Lament with me! with me your sorrows join,
And minse your united tears with mine! Watts.
The best of us appear contented with a mingled, imperfect virtue. Rogers's Sermons.
Our sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, we are ready to minge with ourselves, and cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Logic.
He wooses the bird of Jove
To minge woes with his. Thomson's Spring, l. 1035.
To minge. v. n. To be mixed; to be united with.
Ourselves will minge with society,
And play the humble host. Shakeſp.'s Macbeth.
Alcimus had defiled himself wilfully in the times of their mingling with the Gentiles. 2 Mac. xiv. 13.
Nor priests, nor statesmen,
Could have completed such an ill as that,
If women had not mingled in the mischief. Rowe.
She, when she saw her sister nymphs, suppress'd
Her rising fears, and mingled with the rest. Addison.

MINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Mixture; medley; confused mass.
Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear,
Make minge with our rattling tabourines. Shakeſp.
Neither can I defend my Spanish Fryar; though the comical parts are diverting, and the serious moving, yet they are of an unnatural minge. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

MINGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who mingles.

MINIATURE. n. f. [miniature, French.]
1. Representation in a small compass; representation less than the reality.
The water, with twenty bubbles, not content to have the picture of their face in large, would in each of these bubbles set forth the miniature of them. Sidney, b. ii.
If the ladies should once take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature: in order to keep our posterity from dwindling, we have instituted a tall club. Addison's Guard.
The hidden ways
Of nature would'st thou know? how first the frames
All things in miniature? thy specular orb
Apply to well dissected kernels: lo!
Strange forms arise, in each a little plant
Unfolds its boughs: observe the slender threads
Of first beginning trees, their roots, their leaves,
In narrow seeds describ'd. Philips.

MIN

2. Gay has improperly made it a substantive.
Here shall the pencil bid its colours flow,
And make a miniature creation grow. Gay.
MINIKIN. adj. 1. Small; diminutive. Used in slight contempt.
Sleepest, or wakest thou, jolly shepherd,
Thy sheep be in the corn;
And for one blast of thy minikin mouth,
Thy sheep shall take no harm. Shakefp. King Lear.
MINIKIN. n. f. A small fort of pins.
MINIM. n. f. [from minimus, Lat.]
1. A small being; a dwarf.
Not all
Minims of nature; some of serpent-kind, Wond'rous in length, and corpulence, involv'd
Their snaky folds, and added wings. Milton's Par. Lost.
2. This word is applied, in the northern counties, to a small fort of fish, which they pronounce minim. See MINNOW.
MINIMUS. n. f. [Latin.] A being of the least size.
Get you gone, you dwarf,
You minimus of hind'ring knot-grass made;
You bead, you acorn. Shakespeare.
MINION. n. f. [mignon, French.] A favourite; a darling; a low dependant; one who pleases rather than benefits. A word of contempt, or of slight and familiar kindness.
Minion, said she; indeed I was a pretty one in those days;
I fee a number of lads that love you. Sidney, b. ii.
They were made great courtiers, and in the way of min- nions, when advancement, the most mortal offence to envy, stirred up their former friend to overthrow them. Sidney.
One, who had been a special minion of Andromanas, hated us for having dispossest him of her heart. Sidney, b. ii.
Go rate thy minions;
Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
Before thy sovereign. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Duncan's horses,
Beauteous and swift, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His company must do his minions grace,
Whilst I at home starve for a merry look. Shakespeare.
Edward sent one army into Ireland; not for conquest, but to guard the person of his minion Piers Gaveston. Davies.
If a man should launch into the history of human nature, we should find the very minions of princes linked in conspiracies against their master. L'Estrange's Fable.
The drowly tyrant by his minions led,
To regal rage devotes some patriot's head. Swift.
MINIOUS. adj. [from minium, Latin.] Of the colour of red lead or vermilion.
Some conceive, that the Red Sea receiveth a red and mi- nious tincture from springs that fall into it. Brown.
TO MINISH. v. a. [from diminish, minus, Latin.] To lessen; to lop; to impair.
Ye shall not minish ought from your bricks of your daily task. Exod. v. 19.
They are minished and brought low through oppression.
Psal. cvii. 39.
Another law was to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipp, minished, or impaired coins of silver, not to be current in payments. Bacon's Henry VII.
MINISTER. n. f. [minister, Latin; ministre, Fr.]
1. An agent; one who is employed to any end; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.
You, whom virtue hath made the princeps of felicity, be not the minister of ruin. Sidney, b. ii.
Rumble thy belly full; spit fire, spout rain,
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters;
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness:
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. Shakefp. King Lear.
Th' infernal minister advanc'd, Seiz'd the due victim. Dryden's Theodora and Honoria.
Other spirits govern'd by the will,
Shoot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill;
This sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restrains or lends his ministers abroad. Blackmore.
2. One who is employed in the administration of government.
Kings must be answerable to God, but the ministers to kings, whose eyes, ears, and hands they are, must be answerable to God and man. Bacon.
3. One who serves at the altar; one who performs sacerdotal functions.
Epaphras, a faithful minister of Christ. 1 Cor. i. 7.
The ministers are always preaching, and the governors putting forth edicts against dancing and gaming.
The ministers of the gospel are especially required to shine as lights in the world, because the distinction of their station renders their conduct more observable; and the presumption of their knowledge, and the dignity of their office, gives a peculiar force and authority to their example. Rogers.

4. A delegate; an official.
If wrongfully
Let God revenge; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister. Shakefp. Rich. II.
5. An agent from a foreign power, without the dignity of an ambassador.
TO MINISTER. v. a. [ministre, Latin.] To give; to supply;
to afford.
All the customs of the Irish would minister occasion of a most ample discourse of the original and antiquity of that people. Spenser on Ireland.
Now he that ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for your food and multiply your seed sown. 2 Cor. ix.
The wounded patient bears
The artist's hand that ministers the cure. Oruay's Orphan.
TO MINISTER. v. n.
1. To attend; to serve in any office.
Certain of them had the charge of the ministering vessels, to bring them in and out by tale. 1 Chron. ix. 28.
They which minister about holy things, live of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.
At table Eve
Minister'd naked, and their flowing cups
With pleasant liquors crown'd. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
2. To give medicines.
Can't thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain? Shak. Macb.
3. To give supplies of things needful; to give assistance; to contribute; to conduce.
Others ministered unto him of their substance. Luke viii. 3.
He who has a soul wholly void of gratitude, should let his soul to learn of his body; for all the parts of that minister to one another. South's Sermons.
There is no truth which a man may more evidently make out than the existence of a God; yet he that shall content himself with things as they minister to us pleasures and passions, and not make enquiry a little farther into their causes and ends, may live long without any notion of such a being. Locke.
Those good men, who take such pleasure in relieving the miserable for Christ's sake, would not have been less forward to minister unto Christ himself. Atterbury.
Fasting is not absolutely good, but relatively, and as it ministers to other virtues. Snodgrass's Sermons.
4. To attend on the service of God.
Whether prophesy, let us prophesy according to the proportion of faith; or ministry, let us wait on our ministering.
Rom. xii. 7.
MINISTERIAL. adj. [from minister.]
1. Attendant; acting at command.
Understanding is required in a man; courage and vivacity in the lion; service, and ministerial officiousness, in the ox.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
From effences unseen, celestial names,
Enlight'ning spirits, and ministerial flames,
Lift we our reason to that sovereign cause,
Who blest'd the whole with life. Prior.
2. Acting under superior authority.
For the ministerial officers in court there must be an eye unto them. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Abstinence, the apostle determines, is of no other real value in religion, than as a ministerial cause of moral effects; as it recalls us from the world, and gives a serious turn to our thoughts. Rogers's Sermons.
3. Sacerdotal; belonging to the ecclesiastics or their office.
These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom plainly allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hosker.
4. Pertaining to ministers of state, or persons in subordinate authority.
MINISTRY. n. f. [ministerium, Lat.] Office; service. This word is now contracted to ministry, but used by Milton as four syllables.
They that will have their chamber filled with a good scent, make some odoriferous water be blown about it by their servants mouths that are dextrous in that ministry. Digby.
This temple to frequent
With ministries due, and solemn rites. Milton, b. xii.
MINISTRAL. adj. [from minister.] Pertaining to a minister.
MINISTRANTS. adj. [from minister.] Attendant; acting at command.
Him thrones, and pow'rs,
Princedom, and dominations ministrant, Accompany'd to heav'n-gate. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
Ministrant to their queen with busy care,
Four faithful handmaids the soft rites prepare. Pope.
MINISTRATION.

MIN

MINISTRATION. n. f. [from ministre, Latin.]
1. Agency; intervention; office of an agent delegated or commissioned by another.
God made him the instrument of his providence to me, as he hath made his own-land to him, with this difference, that God, by his ministration to me, intends to do him a favour.
Taylor's living heli.
Though sometimes effected by the immediate fiat of the divine will, yet I think they are most ordinarily done by the ministration of angels. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. Service; office; ecclesiastical function.
If the present ministration be more glorious than the former, the minister is more holy. Atterbury's Sermons.
MINIUM. n. f. [Latin.]
Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcined into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called mafficot or mafficot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is the common minium or red lead: among the ancients minium was the name for cinnabar: the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.
MINISTRY. n. f. [contracted from ministry; ministerium, Lat.]
1. Office; service.
So far is an indistinction of all persons, and, by consequence, an anarchy of all things, so far from being agreeable to the will of God, declared in his great household, the world, and especially in all the ministries of his proper household the church, that there was never yet any time, I believe, since it was a number, when some of its members were not more facerd than others. Sprad's Sermons.
2. Office of one set apart to preach; ecclesiastical function.
Their ministry perform'd, and race well run,
They die. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Saint Paul was miraculously called to the ministry of the gospel, and had the whole doctrine of the gospel from God by immediate revelation; and was appointed the apostle of the Gentiles for propagating it in the heathen world. Locke.
3. Agency; interposition.
The natural world he made after a miraculous manner; but directs the affairs of it ever since by standing rules, and the ordinary ministry of second causes.
The poets introduced the ministry of the gods, and taught the separate existence of human souls. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Business.
He safe from loud alarms,
Abhor'd the wicked ministry of arms. Dryden's Zen.
5. Persons employed in the public affairs of a state.
I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.
MINNOCK. n. f. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and minx are originally the same word.
An ass's hole I fixed on his head;
Anon his Thistle must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakespeare.
MINNOW. n. f. [menue, French.] A very small fish; a pink;
a corruption of minim, which see.
Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakespeare.
The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the Spring they make excellent minnow tansies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses and tansy. Walton's Angler.
The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of min- now fishing. Watson's Angler.
MINOR. adj. [Latin.]
1. Petty; inconsiderable.
If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferriour falsities. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
2. Less; smaller.
They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest.
The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account is not strange, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakeable numbers.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
MINOR. n. f.
1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

MIN

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign; was a minor. Davies on Ireland.
He and his mule might be minors, but the libertines are full grown. Collier's View of the Stage.
Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.
A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism:
The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.
He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbutnot.
TO MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.] To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.
This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minimates the object. Glanville's Scryp.
MINORATION. n. f. [from minorate.] The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.
Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiencies are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
We hope the mercies of God will confider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.
MINORITY. n. f. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Latin.]
1. The state of being under age.
I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakespeare.
He is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakespeare.
These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or
no. Hayward's Edw. VI.
Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, procured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon's Henry VII.
If there be evidence, that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.
2. The state of being less.
From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.
MINOTAUR. n. f. [minotaurus, French; minos and taurus.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus's labyrinth.
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shakespeare.
MINSTER. n. f. [mynstre, Saxon.] A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.
MINSTREL. n. f. [menestrel, Spanish; menestrallas, low Latin.]
A musician; one who plays upon instruments.
Hark how the minstrels 'gin to thrill aloud
Their merry mulick that rebounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser's Epithal.
I will give you the minstrel.
—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shakespeare.
I to the vulgar am become a jelt;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys's Paraphrase.
These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-checks and bloated faces known. Dryden.
Often our seers and poets have confess'd,
That mulick's force can tame the furious beast;
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar refrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.
MINSTRELSEY. n. f. [from minstrel.]
1. Mulick; instrumental harmony.
Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelse. Davies.

That loving wretch that swears,
Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsy, the spheres. Donne.
I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsy,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.
2. A number of musicians.
Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such haſt thou arm'd the minstrelsy of heav'n. Milton.
MINT. n. f. [mince, Saxon; menthe, Fr. mentha, Latin.] A plant.
The mint is a verticillate plant with labiated flowers, consisting of one leaf, whose upper-lip is arched, and the under-lip divided into three parts; but both of them are so cut, that the flower seems to be divided into four parts, the two lips scarcely appearing: these flowers are collected into thick whorles in some species, but in others they grow in a spike; each flower having four feeds succeeding it, which are inclosed in the flower-cup: it hath a creeping root, and the whole plant has a strong aromatick scent. Miller.
Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.
MINT. n. f. [minnte, Dutch; mynecian, to coin, Saxon.]
1. The place where money is coined.
What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison on ancient Medals.
2. Any place of invention.
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakespeare.
As the mint of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison's Freeholder, No. 7.
To MINT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To coin; to stamp money.
Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to let the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. To invent; to forge.
Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon's War with Spain.
MINTAGE. n. f. [from mint.]
1. That which is coined or stamped.
Its pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, un moulding reasons mintage
Character'd in the face. Milton.
2. The duty paid for coining.
MINTER. n. f. [from mint.] Coiner.
Sterling ought to be of pure silver as is called leaf silver, and the mint must add only weight, if the silver be not pure. Camden's Remains.
MINTMAN. n. f. [mint and man.] One skilled in coining.
He that thinketh Spain to be some great over-match for this estate, is no good mintman; but takes greatness of kingdoms according to their bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon's War with Spain.
MINTMASTER. n. f. [mint and master.]
1. One who presides in coining.
That which is coined, as mintmasters confessed, is alloyed with about a twelfth part of copper. Boyle.
2. One who invents.
The great mintmasters of these terms, the schoolmen and metaphysicians, have wherewithal to content him. Locke.
MINUET. n. f. [minuet, French.] A stately regular dance.
The tender creature could not see his fate,
With whom she'd danc'd a minuet so late. Stepney.
John Trot has the assurance to set up for a minuet dancer. Spektator, No. 308.
MINUM. n. f.
1. [With printers.] A small sort of printing letter.
2. [With musicians.] A note of flow time, two of which make a semibreve, as two crotchets make a minim; two quavers a crotchet, and two semiquavers a quaver. Bailey.
Oh, he's the courageous captain of compliments; he fights as you sing pricksongs, keeps time, distance, and proportion; rests his minim, one, two, and the third in your bosom. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
MINUTE. adj. [minutus, Lat.] Small; little; slender; small in bulk; small in consequence.
Some minute philosophers pretend,
That with our days our pains and pleasures end. Denham.
Such an universal superintendency has the eye and hand of providence over all, even the most minute and inconsiderable things. South's Sermons.

Into small parts the wondrous stone divide,
Ten thousand of minute size express
The same propension which the large posses. Blackmore.
The serum is attenuated by circulation, so as to pass into the minute channels, and become fit nutriment for the body. Arbutnot on Aliments.
In all divisions we should consider the larger and more immediate parts of the subject, and not divide it at once into the more minute and remote parts. Watt's Logic.
MINUTE. n. f. [minutus, Latin.]
1. The sixtieth part of an hour.
This man so complete,
Who was enroll'd 'mongst wonders, and when we,
Almost with lifting ravish'd, could not find
His hour of speech a minute. Shakespeare Henry VIII.
2. Any small space of time.
They walk'd about me ev'ry minute while;
And if I did but stir out of my bed
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart. Shakespeare.
The speed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd.
Gods! that the world should turn
On minutes and on moments. Denham's Sephy.
Experience does every minute prove the sad truth of this assertion. South's Sermons.
Tell her, that I some certainty may bring;
I go this minute to attend the king. Dryden's Aurengzebr.
3. The first draught of any agreement in writing; this is common in the Scottish law: as, have you made a minute of that contract?
To MINUTE. v. a. [minuter, French.] To set down in short hints.
I no sooner heard this critic talk of my works, but I minuted what he had said, and resolv'd to enlarge the plan of my speculations. Spektator, No. 418.
MINUTE-BOOK. n. f. [minute and book.] Book of short hints.
MINUTE-GLASS. n. f. [minute and glass.] Glass of which the sand measures a minute.
MINUTELY. adv. [from minute.] To a small point; exactly; to the least part; nicely.
In this posture of mind it was impossible for him to keep that slow pace, and observe minutely that order of ranging all he said, from which results an obvious peripetia. Locke.
Change of night and day,
And of the seasons ever circulating round,
Minutely faithful. Thomson's Summer, l. 40.
MINUTELY. adv. [from minute, the substantive.]
1. Every minute; with very little time intervening.
What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, resounding for ever in our ears? As if it were minutely proclaimed in thunder from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's importunity till they arise from so mortiferous a state. Hammond's Fundamentals.
2. In the following passage it seems rather to be an adjective, as hourly is both the adverb and adjective.
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach,
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
MINUTENESS. n. f. [from minute.] Smallness; exility; inconsiderableness.
The animal spirit and insensible particles never fall under our senses by reason of their minuteness. Bentley's Sermons.
MINUTE-WATCH. n. f. [minute and watch.] A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.
Casting our eyes upon a minute-watch, we found that from the beginning of the pumping, about two minutes after the coals had been put in glowing, to the total disappearing of the fire, there had pass'd but three minutes. Boyle.
MINX. n. f. [contracted, I suppose, from minxer.] A young, pert, wanton girl.
Lewd minx!
Come, go with me apart. Shakespeare.
Some torches bore, some links,
Before the proud virago minx. Hudibras, p. ii.
She, when but yet a tender minx, began
To hold the door, but now sets up for man. Dryden.
MIRACLE. n. f. [miracle, Fr. miraculum, Latin.]
1. A wonder; something above human power.
Nothing almost fees miracles
But misfery. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Virtuous and holy, chosen from above,
To work exceeding miracles on earth. Shakespeare Henry VI.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me. Shakespeare Henry VI.
2. [In theology.] An effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.
The miracles of our Lord are peculiarly eminent above the lying wonders of demons, in that they were not made out of vain ostentation of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement of power, and to raise unprofitable amazement; but for the real benefit and advantage of men, by feeding feeding the hungry, healing all sorts of diseases, ejecting of devils, and reviving the dead. Bentley's Sermons.

MIRACULOUS. adj. [miraculeux, Fr. from miracle.] Done by miracle; produced by miracle; effected by power more than natural.
Arithmetical progression might easily demonstrate how fast mankind would increase, overpassing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Israelites, who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years from seventy unto six hundred thousand able men. Raleigh's Essays.
Before this day, for thy great name,
Unto his ancient and miraculous right. Herbert.
Why this strength
Miraculous yet remaining in those locks?
His might continues in thee not for naught. Milton's Ag.
At the first planting of the Christian religion in the world, God was pleas'd to accompany it with a miraculous power. Tillotson.
MIRACULOUSLY. adv. [from miraculous.] By miracle; by power above that of nature.
It was a singular providence of God, to draw those northern heathen nations down into those Christian parts, where they might receive Christianity, and to mingle nations so remote miraculously, to make one blood and kindred of all people, and each to have knowledge of him. Spenser on Ireland.
Turnus was to be slain that very day; and Aeneas, wounded as he was, could not have engaged him in single combat, unless his hurt had been miraculously healed. Dryden.
MIRACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from miraculous.] The state of being effected by miracle; superiority to natural power.
MIRADOR. n. f. [Spanish, from mirar, to look.] A balcony; a gallery whence ladies see shows.
Mean time your valiant son, who had before Gain'd fame, rode round, to ev'ry mirador;
Beneath each lady's stand a stop he made,
And bowing, took th' applauses which they paid. Dryden.
MIRE. n. f. [myer, Dutch.] Mud; dirt at the bottom of water.
He his rider from her lofty feed
Would have cast down, and trod in dirty mire. Fa. Qu.
Here's that, which is too weak to be a finer, honest water, which ne'er left man i' th' mire. Shak. Timon of Athens.
I'm Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.
I appeal to any man's reason, whether it be not better that there should be a distinction of land and sea, than that all should be mire and water. More's Antidote against Atheism.
Now plung'd in mire, now by sharp brambles torn.
To MIRE. v. a. [from the noun.] To whelm in the mud; to soil with mud.
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's stifle at my gates?
Who smother'd thus, and mir'd with infamy,
I might have said no part of it is mine. Shakespeare.
MIRE. n. f. [myr, Welsh; myra, Saxon; mier, Dutch.] An ant; a pismire.
MIRINESS. n. f. [from miry.] Dirtiness; fullness of mire.
MIRKSOME. n. f. [mark, dark, Danish.] In the derivatives of this set, no regular orthography is observed: it is common to write murky, to which the rest ought to conform.] Dark; obscure.
Through mirksome air her ready way she makes. F. Qu.
MIRROR. n. f. [mirair, French; mirar, Spanish, to look.]
1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.
And in his waters which your mirror make,
Behold your faces as the crystal bright.
That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view,
To view myself infus'd an inward light,
Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true,
Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.
Lest bright the moon,
But opposite in level'd West was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage,
Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom music cures. Waller.
By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wond'ring, he saw his features and his hue,
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew.
Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air -
In the clear mirror of thy ruling fate,
I saw, alas! some dread event impending.
2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; an exemplar; an archetype.
The works of nature are no less exact, than if she did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker, b. i.

MIS

O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirror of grace and majesty divine. Fairy Queen, b. i.
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men? Shakespeare.
Mirror of ancient faith in early youth. Dryden.
MIRROR-STONE. n. f. [sclenites, Lat.] A kind of transparent stone. Lin.
MIRTH. n. f. [myrthos, Saxon.] Merriment; jollity; gaiety; laughter.
To give a kingdom for a mirth, to sit,
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave. Shakespeare.
Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure
The table round. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch,
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest. Shakespeare.
Most of the appearing mirth in the world is not mirth but art: the wounded spirit is not seen, but walks under a disguise. South's Sermons.
With genial joy to warm the soul,
Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl. Pope's Odyssey.
MIRTHFUL. adj. [mirth and full.] Merry; gay; cheerful.
No simple word,
That shall be utter'd at our mirthful board,
Shall make us sad next morning. B. Johnson, Epigr. 101.
The feast was serv'd; the bowl was crown'd;
To the king's pleasure went the mirthful round. Prior.
MIRTHLESS. adj. [from mirth.] Joyless; cheerless.
MIRY. adj. [from mir.]
1. Deep in mud; muddy.
Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and the under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was bemoiled. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.
All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vast caves under-ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovel'd in endless stench and misery. Temple.
Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay's Trivia.
So have I seen ill-coupled hounds Drag different ways in miry grounds. Swift.
2. Consisting of mire.
Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain,
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood?
Mis, an inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or deprivation of the meaning: as, chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended; from mes in Teutonic and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples; but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.
MISACCEPTATION. n. f. [mis and acceptation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.
MISADVENTURE. n. f. [misadventure, Fr. mis and adventure.]
1. Mischance; misfortune; ill luck; bad fortune.
Your looks are pale and wild, and do import Some misadventure. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
When a commander, either upon necessity or misadventure, falleth into danger, it much advanceth both his reputation and enterprize, if bravely he behave himself. Hayward.
The body consisteth, after all the losses and misadventures, of no less than six thousand foot. Clarendon, b. viii.
Distinguishing betwixt actions of misadventure and of design. L'Estrange's Fables.
The trouble of a misadventure now and then, that reaches not his innocence or reputation, may not be an ill way to teach him more caution. Locke on Education.
2. [In law.] Manslaughter.
MISADVENTURED. adj. [from misadventure.] Unfortunate.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes,
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventure'd piteous overthrows
Do with their death bury their parents' strife. Shakespeare.
MISADVISED. adj. [mis and advised.] Ill directed.
MISAIMED. adj. [mis and aim.] Not aimed rightly.
The idle stroke enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed light,
Did fall to ground.
MISANTHROPE. n. f. [misanthrope, French; μισανθρωπος, Gr.]
MISANTHROPOS. n. f. [mis and anthropos.] A hater of mankind.
I am misanthrope, and hate mankind.
Alas, poor dean! his only scope
Was to be held a misanthrope;
This into gen'ral odium drew him. Swift's Miscel.
MISANTHROPY. n. f. [misanthropia, Fr. from misanthrope.] Hatred of mankind.
MISAPPLICATION. n. f. [mis and application.] Application to a wrong purpose.
The indistinction of many in the community of name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

The vigilance of those who preside over these charities is so exemplary, that persons disposed to do good can entertain no suspicions of the misapplication of their bounty. Atterbury.
It is our duty to be provident for the future, and wisely to guard against whatever may lead us into misapplications of it. Rogers's Sermons.

To MISAPPLY, v. a. [mis and apply.] To apply to wrong purposes.
Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied, Shakespeare.
And vice sometimes by action's dignified.
The holy treasure was to be reserved, and issued for holy uses, and not misapplied to any other ends. Herivel.
He that knows, that whiteness is the name of that colour he has observed in snow, will not misapply that word as long as he retains that idea. Locke.

To MISAPPREHEND, v. a. [mis and apprehend.] Not to understand rightly.
That your reasonings may lose none of their force by my misapprehending or misrepresenting them, I shall give the reader your arguments. Locke.

MISAPPREHENSION, n. f. [mis and apprehension.] Mistake; not right apprehension.
It is a good degree of knowledge to be acquainted with the causes of our ignorance: and what we have to say under this head, will equally concern our misapprehensions and errors. Glanville's Sleep.

To MISASCRIBE, v. a. [mis and ascribe.] To ascribe falsely.
That may be misascribed to art which is the bare production of nature. Boyle.

To MISASSIGN, v. a. [mis and assign.] To assign erroneously.
We have not misassigned the cause of this phenomenon. Boyle.

To MISBECOME, v. a. [mis and become.] Not to become; to be unbecomely; not to suit.
Either she has a possibility in that which I think impossible, or else impossible loves need not misbecome me. Sidney.
What to the dauphin from England?
—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty fender. Shak. Henry V.
That boldness which lads get amongst their play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and an ill-turn'd confidence, that those misbecoming and dissingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.

Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.

MISBEGOTTEN, adj. [begot or begotten with mis.] Unlawfully MISBEGOTTEN, n. f. or irregularly begotten.
Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakespeare Henry VI.
Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring man-slaughter into form, for quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakespeare.
The misbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes
The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.

To MISBEHAVE, v. n. [mis and behave.] To act ill or improperly.
MISBEHAVED, adj. [mis and behave.] Untaught; ill-bred; uncivil.
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehave'd and fullen wench,
Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shakespeare.

MISBEHAVIOUR, n. f. [mis and behaviour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.
The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laudably in some respects, who does not so in others. Addison's Freeholder.

MISBELIEF, n. f. [mis and belief.] False religion; a wrong belief.
MISBELIEVER, n. f. [mis and believer.] One that holds a false religion, or believes wrongly.
Yes, if I drew it with a curs'd intent
It must be so. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

To MISCALULATE, v. a. [mis and calculate.] To reckon wrong.
After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated. Arbutnot on Coins.

To MISCALL, v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.
My heart will sigh when I miscall it so. Shak. Rich. II.
The third act, which connects propositions and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscall it if we name it reason. Glanville's Sleep.
What you miscall their folly is their care. Dryden.

MISCHANCE, n. f. [mis and chance.] Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.
The lady Cécropia sent him to excuse the mischance of her beasts ranging in that dangerous fort. Sidney, b. i.
Extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her family. Sidney, b. ii.
View these letters, full of bad mischance.
France is revolted. Shakespeare Henry VI. p. i.
Sleep rock thy brain,
And never come mischance between us twain. Shakespeare.
Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him; and nothing can be a fault that is not naturally in a man's power to prevent; otherwise, it is a man's unhappiness, his mischance or calamity, but not his fault. South's Sermons.

MISCHIEF, n. f. [mischievous, old French.]
1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and injuriously done.
The law in that case punisheth the thought; for better is a mischief than an inconvenience. Spenser on Ireland.
Come you murdering ministers!
Wherever in your sightless mischiefs
You wait on nature's mischief. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thy tongue deviseth mischief.
Was I the cause of mischief, or the man,
Whose lawless lust the fatal war began? Dryden's Zen.
Come not thou with mischief-making beauty,
To interpose between us, look not on him. Rowe.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.
States call in foreigners to assist them against a common enemy; but the mischief was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued. Swift.

To MISCHIEF, v. a. [from the noun.] To hurt; to harm; to injure.
If the greatest inward heat be not sweetened by meekness, or not governed by prudence, can it bring to our souls any benefit? rather it mischiefs them. Spratt's Sermons.

MISCHIEFMAKER, n. f. [from mischief and make.] One who causes mischief.
MISCHIEVOUS, adj. [from mischief.]
1. Harmful; hurtful; destructive; noxious; pernicious; injurious; wicked.
This false, wily, doubling disposition is intolerably mischievous to society. South's Sermons.
I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet;
But mongrel mischievous.
He had corrupted or deluded most of his servants, telling them that their master was run mad; that he had disinherited his heir, and was going to settle his estate upon a parish-boy; that if he did not look after their master he would do some very mischievous thing. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. Spiteful; malicious.
MISCHIEVOUSLY, adv. [from mischief.] Noxiously; hurtfully; wickedly.
Not was the cruel destiny content
To sweep at once her life and beauty too;
But like a harden'd felon took a pride
To work more mischievously slow,
And plundered first, and then destroy'd. Dryden.

MISCHIEVOUSNESS, n. f. [from mischievous.] Hurtfulness; perniciousness; wickedness.
Compare the harmfulness, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliancy, which is in youth, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obduracy found in an aged, long-practised sinner. South's Sermons.

MISCHIEF, adj. [from mischievous, Latin.] Possible to be mischievous.
Acid spirits are subtle liquors which come over in distillations, not inflammable, miscible with water. Arbutnot.

MISCHIEF, n. f. [mis and chance.] Unfair or false quotation.
Being charged with misquotation and unfair dealing, it was requisite to say something; for honesty is a tender point. Collier's View of the Stage.

To MISCHIEF, v. a. [mis and chance.] To quote wrong.
MISCLAIM, n. f. [mis and claim.] Mistaken claim.
Error, misclaim and forgetfulness, become suitors for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

MISCOMPUTATION, n. f. [mis and computation.] False reckoning.
It was a general misfortune and miscomputation of that time, that the party had so good an opinion of their own reputation and interest. Clarendon.

To MISCONCEIVE, v. a. [mis and conceive.] To mis-judge; to have a false notion of.
Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden fears,
Break gentle sleep with misconceived doubt. Spenser.
Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes of those things, which, for want of due consideration heretofore, they misconceived. Hooker, b. v.

MIS

MISCONCEIVED Joan of Arc hath been
A virgin from her tender infancy. Shakespeare Henry VI.

MISCONCEIT, n. f. [mis and conceit, and conception.] False opinion; wrong notion.
The other which instead of it we are required to accept, is only by error and misconception named the ordinance of Jesus Christ; no one proof as yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed. Hooker.
It cannot be that our knowledge should be other than an heap of misconception and error. Glanville's Sleep.
Great errors and dangers result out of a misconception of the names of things. Harvey on Consumptions.
It will be a great satisfaction to see those pieces of most ancient history, which have been chiefly preserved in scripture, confirmed anew, and freed from those misconceptions or misrepresentations which made them fit uneasy upon the spirits even of the best men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

MISCONDUCT, n. f. [mis and conduct.] Ill behaviour; ill management.
They are industriously proclaimed and aggravated by such as are guilty or innocent of the same slips or misconducts in their own behaviour. Addison's Spectator, No. 256.
It highly concerned them to reflect, how great obligations both the memory of their past misconducts, and their present advantages, laid on them, to walk with care and circumspection. Rogers's Sermons.

To MISCONDUCT, v. a. [mis and conduct.] To manage amiss; to carry on wrong.
MISCONJECTURE, n. f. [mis and conjecture.] A wrong guess.
I hope they will plausibly receive our attempts, or candidly correct our misconceptions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To MISCONJECTURE, v. a. [mis and conjecture.] To guess wrong.
MISCONSTRUCTION, n. f. [mis and construction.] Wrong interpretation of words or things.
It pleas'd the king his matter very lately
To strike at me upon his misconstruction,
When he conjunct, and flatt'ring his displeasure, Tript me behind. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Others conceive the literal acceptance to be a misconstruction of the symbolical expression. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Those words were very weakly inserted where they are so liable to misconstruction. Stillinger.

To MISCONSTRUCT, v. a. [mis and construct.] To interpret wrong.
That which by right exposition buildeth up Christian faith, being misconstrued breedeth error; between true and false construction the difference reason must shew. Hooker, b. iii.
We would have had you heard
The manner and the purpose of his treasons;
That you might well have signified the same Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstrue us in him. Shakespeare Rich. III.
Many of the unbelieving Israelites would have misconstrued this story of mankind. Kalish.
Do not, great Sir, misconstrue his intent,
Nor call rebellion what was prudent care,
To guard himself by necessary war. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
A virtuous emperor was much afflicted to find his actions misconstrued and defamed by a party. Addison.

MISCONTINUANCE, n. f. [mis and continuance.] Cessation; intermission.
To MISCONSEL, v. a. [mis and counsel.] To advise wrong.
Every thing that is begun with reason
Will come by ready means unto his end,
But things misconseled must needs miswend. Spenser.

To MISCOUNT, v. a. [mis and count.] To reckon wrong.
MISCREANCE, n. f. [from miscreancy or miscreancy, suspicion, French.] Unbelief; false faith; adherence to a false religion.
If thou wilt renounce thy miscreancy,
And my true liegeman yield thyself for ay,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance. Spenser.
The more usual causes of depravation are murder, manslaughter, heresy, miscreancy, atheism, simony. Ayliffe.

MISCREANT, n. f. [miscreant, French.]
1. One that holds a false faith; one who believes in false gods.
Their prophets justly condemned them as an adulterous seed, and a wicked generation of miscreants, which had forsaken the living God. Hooker, b. v.
2. A vile wretch.
Now by Apollo, king,
Thou swear'st it thy gods in vain.
—O vassal! miscreant!
If extraordinary lenity proves ineffectual, those miscreants ought to be made sensible that our constitution is armed with force. Addison's Freeholder, No. 50.

Acid spirits are subtle liquors which come over in distillations, not inflammable, miscible with water. Arbutnot.

MISCHIEF, n. f. [mis and chance.] Unfair or false quotation.
Being charged with misquotation and unfair dealing, it was requisite to say something; for honesty is a tender point. Collier's View of the Stage.

To MISCHIEF, v. a. [mis and chance.] To quote wrong.
MISCLAIM, n. f. [mis and claim.] Mistaken claim.
Error, misclaim and forgetfulness, become suitors for some remission of extreme rigour. Bacon.

MISCOMPUTATION, n. f. [mis and computation.] False reckoning.
It was a general misfortune and miscomputation of that time, that the party had so good an opinion of their own reputation and interest. Clarendon.

To MISCONCEIVE, v. a. [mis and conceive.] To mis-judge; to have a false notion of.
Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden fears,
Break gentle sleep with misconceived doubt. Spenser.
Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes of those things, which, for want of due consideration heretofore, they misconceived. Hooker, b. v.

MIS

MISCREATE. } adj. [mis and created.] Formed unnaturally or MISCREATED. } illegitimately; made as by a blunder of nature.

Then made he head against his enemies,
And Ymmer flew or Logris miscreate.
Eftoons he took that miscreated fair,
And that false other sprite, on whom he spread
A seeming body of the subtle air.
God forbid, my lord,
That thou shouldst fashion, wrest, or bow your reading;
With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colours with the truth.
MISDEED. n. f. [mis and deed.] Evil action.

O God,
If thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone.
Evils, which our own misdeeds have wrought,
Chas'd from a throne, abandon'd, and exil'd
For foul misdeeds, were punishments too mild.
To MISDEEM. v. a. [mis and deem.] To judge ill of; to mistake.

All unweeting an enchanter bad
His sense abus'd, and made him to misdeem
My loyalty, not such as it did seem.
Besides, were we unchangeable in will,
And of a wit that nothing could mislead,
Equal to God, whose wisdom shineth still
And never errs, we might ourselves esteem.
To MISDEMEAN. v. a. [mis and demean.] To behave ill.
From frailty

And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us,
Have misdeemean'd yourself.
MISDEMEANOR. n. f. [mis and demean.] Offence; ill behaviour; something less than an atrocious crime.

The house of commons have only power to censure the members of their own house, in point of election or misdemeanors, in or towards that house.
It is no real disgrace to the church merely to lose her privileges, but to forfeit them by her fault or misdeemeanor.
These could never have touched the head, or stopped the source of these unhappy misdeemeanors, for which the punishment was sent.

A place, where misdevotion frames
A thousand prayers to fairs, whose very names
The church knew not, heav'n knows not yet.
MISDEVOTION. n. f. [mis and devotion.] Mistaken piety.
A drop through his flesh did flow,
Which by misdiety daily greater grew.
To MISDISTINGUISH. v. a. [mis and distinguish.] To make wrong distinctions.

If we imagine a difference where there is none, because we distinguish where we should not, it may not be denied that we misdistinguish.
To MISDO. v. a. [mis and do.] To do wrong; to commit a crime; to offend.

Afford me place to shew what recompence
T'wards thee I intend for what I have misdone.
To MISDO. v. n. To commit faults.
Try the erring soul
Not wilfully misdoing, but unaware Milled.

The worst is, to think ourselves safe so long as we keep our injuries from the knowledge of men, and out of our own view, without any awe of that all-seeing eye that observes all our misdoings.
I have misdone, and I endure the smart,
Loth to acknowledge, but more loth to part.
To MISDOUBT. n. f. [mis and doubt.] An offender; a criminal; a malefactor.

Were they not contained in duty with a fear of law, which inflicteth sharp punishments to misdoers, no man should enjoy any thing.
To MISDOUBT. v. a. [mis and doubt.] To suspect of deceit or danger.

If she only misdoubted me, I were in heaven; for quickly I would bring sufficient assurance.
I do not misdoubt my wife, but I would be loth to turn them both together; a man may be too confident.
The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth ev'ry bush;
And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.

If you misdoubt me that I am not free,
I know not how I shall assure you farther.
Is to misdoubt my reason or my love.
MISDOUBT. n. f. [mis and doubt.]
1. Suspicion of crime or danger.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,

MIS

As his misdoings present occasion;
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend.
2. Irresolution; hesitation.
York, steel thy fearful thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution.
MISDE. n. f. [French.] Issue. Law term.
To MISEMPLY. v. a. [mis and employ.] To use to wrong purposes.

Their frugal fathers gains they misplay,
And turn to point and pearl, and ev'ry female toy.
Some taking things upon trust, misplay their power by lazily enslaving their minds to the dictates of others.
That vain and foolish hope, which is misplayed on temporal objects, produces many sorrows.
They grew dissolute and prophane; and by misplaying the advantages which God had thrown into their lap, provoked him to withdraw them.

MISEMPLYMENT. n. f. [mis and employment.] Improper application.
An improvident expence, and misplayment of their time and faculties.
MISER. n. f. [mis and er.] Latin.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.
Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the fender.
I wish that it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am.
Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make,
Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake.

A wretch; a mean fellow.
Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood,
3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty.
Though she be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to miser's gold,
Rather than wrong Castilio I'd forget her.
No silver fairs by dying misers giv'n,
Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heav'n;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise.

MISERABLE. adj. [miserable, French; miser, Latin.]
1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.
O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!

When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Most miserable is the desire that's glorious.
What's more miserable than discontent?
It is probable that there will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch.

What hopes delude thee, miserable man? Dryden's Eu.
2. Wretched; worthless.
Miserable comforters are ye all.
3. Culpably parsimonious; stingy.
MISERABLENESS. n. f. [from miserable.] State of misery.
MISERABLY. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.
Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrell'd, one of which was slain, and the other hanged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.
As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you; so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place, where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained.

3. Covetously.
MISERY. n. f. [miseria, Latin; miser, French.]
1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.
My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery.
Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.
When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes.
The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life.
3. From miser.] Covetousness; avarice. Not in use.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck of th' world: he covets less Than misery itself would give.
In a fabric of forty thousand pounds charge, I with thirty pounds laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge.

MIS

MISESTIMATE. n. f. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.
To MISFACTION. v. a. [mis and factious.] To form wrong.
A thing in reason impossible, though their misfashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God.

To MISFORM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.
His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that misform'd shape misshap'd more.
MISFORTUNE. n. f. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck;
want of good fortune.

Fortune thus 'gan say, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift.
What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so plung'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach?
Consider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault.

To MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.
As Henry's late prefacing prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm or ours.
This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Yet oft his heart divine of something ill,

Misgave him.
If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his absolution, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspensions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward.

His heart misgives him, that there were so many meeting-houses; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy.
To MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.
Solymen charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own private use.

MISGOVERNED. adj. [from misgovern.] Rude; uncivilized.
Rude, misgovern'd hands, from window tops,
Threw dust and rubbish on king Richard's head.
MISGOVERNANCE. n. f. [mis and governance.] Irregularity.
Thy mule too long slumbereth in slowness,
Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance.

MISGOVERNMENT. n. f. [mis and government.]
1. Ill administration of public affairs.
Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon public misgovernment.
2. Ill management.
Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undiciplined, as to leave them unprovided of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskil-fulness make them fall into vicious company.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.
MISGUIDANCE. n. f. [mis and guidance.] False direction.
The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-fifth of March for the finding out of Easter; which has caused the misguidance from the fun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts.

Whoever deceives a man, makes him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction.

To MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.
Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war.
Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools.

MISHAPE. n. f. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.
To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors.

Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein she hath thus wretchedly been wrecked.

MIS

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient might.
Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps.

It cannot be
But that success attends him: if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or your revenge.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen,
Speak; for he could not die unlike himself.
MISHMASH. n. f. [mis and haph.] A low word. A mingle or hotchpotch.

To MISINFER. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.
Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person.

To MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.
Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed.

By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself.
Bid her well beware,
Left by some fair-appearing good surpris'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid.

MISINFORMATION. n. f. [from misinform.] False intelligence;
false accounts.
Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting bafeness, when backed with greatness, and set on by misinformation.

To MISINTERPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense.
The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worthiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the inno-centest life traduced.

After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquoted and misinterpreted.

To MISJOIN. v. a. [mis and join.] To join unfitly or improperly.
In reason's absence mimic fancy wakes
To imitate her; but misjoining shapings,
Wild work produces oft, and most in dreams;
Ill-matching words, and deeds, long past, or late.

Luther, more mistaking what he read,
Misjoins the sacred body with the bread.
To MISJUDGE. v. a. [mis and judge.] To form false opinions;
to judge ill.

Where we misjudge the matter, a miscarriage draws pity after it; but when we are transported by pride, our ruin lies at our own door.

You see through love, and that deludes your sight;
As, what is straight, seems crooked through the water.
By allowing himself in what is innocent, he breeds offence to his weak and misjudging neighbour.

Too long misjudging have I thought thee wife,
But sure relentless folly steals thy breath.

To MISLAY. v. a. [mis and lay.] To lay in a wrong place.
Mean time my worthy wife, our arms mislay'd,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd,
The fault is generally mislaid upon nature; and there is often a complaint of want of parts, when the fault lies in want of a due improvement.

If the butler be the tell-tale, mislay a spoon, so as he may never find it.

MISLAY. n. f. [from mislay.] One that puts in the wrong place.
The mislayer of a mere-stone is to blame: but the unjust judge is the capital remover of land-marks, when he despoils amids of lands.

To MISLEAD. v. a. [mis and lead.] To guide a wrong way;
to betray to mischief or mistake.
Take, oh take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn.

Those we love,
That are misled upon your cousin's part.

Poor misled men: your states are yet worthy pity.
If you would hear, and change your savage minds,
Leave to be mad.

Trust not to your servants who mislead or misinform you.

MIS

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton.
What can they teach and not mislead:
Ignorant of themselves, of God much more? Milton.
Thou who hast taught me to forgive the ill,
And recompense, as friends, the good misled;
If mercy be a precept of thy will,
Return that mercy on thy servant's head. Dryden.
The imagination, which is of simple perception, doth never of itself, and directly, mislead us; yet it is the almost fatal means of our deception. Glavinville's Scep.
Whatever necessity determines to the pursuit of real bliss, the same necessity establishes suspense, and scrutiny of each successive desire, whether the satisfaction of it does not interfere with our true happiness, and mislead us from it. Locke.
'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill:
But of the two less dang'rous is th' offence
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense. Pope.
MISLEADER. n. f. [from mislead.] One that leads to ill.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots;
Till then I banish thee on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders. Shakespeare.
They have disclaimed and abandoned those heretical phantasies touching our Saviour, wherein by their misleaders they had been anciently plunged. Brerewood on Languages.
TO MISLIKE. v. a. [mis and like.] To disapprove; to be not pleased with; to dislike.
It was hard to say, whether he more liked his doings, or misliked the effect of his doings. Sidney.
Tertullian was not deceived in the nature of the place;
but Aquinas, who misliked this opinion, followed a worse.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
Judge not the preacher, for he is thy judge:
If thou mislike him, thou conceiv'st him not. Herbert.
MISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.] Disapprobation; dislike.
Setting your scorn and your mislike aside,
Tell me some reason, why the lady Gray
Should not become my wife. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Their angry gestures with mislike disclose,
How much his speech offends their noble ears. Fairfax.
MISLIKER. n. f. [from mislike.] One that disapproves.
Open flatterers of great men, privy mislikers of good men, fair speakers with smiling countenances. Asham.
MISLEN. n. f. [corrupted from miscellaneous.] Mixed corn: as,
wheat and rie.
They commonly sow those lands with wheat, mislen, and barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.
TO MISLIE. v. n. [from misli.] To rain in imperceptible drops, like a thick mist: properly misli.
Ynough, thou mourned hast,
Now ginnest to mizzle, hie we homeward fast. Spenser.
The very small drops of a misling rain descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles.
This cold precipitates the vapours either in dews, or, if the vapours more copiously ascend, they are condensed into misling, or into showers of small rain, falling in numerous, thick, small drops. Derham's Physico-Theol.
In misling days when I my thrasher heard,
With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd. Gay's Pastorals.
TO MISLIVE. v. n. [mis and live.] To live ill.
Should not thilke God, that gave him that good,
Eke cherish his child if in his ways he stood,
For if he mislive in leudness and lust,
Little boots all the wealth and the trust. Spenser's Poet.
TO MISMANAGE. v. a. [mis and manage.] To manage ill.
The debates of most princes councils would be in danger to be mismanaged, since those who have a great stroke in them are not always perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism.
Locke.
MISMANAGEMENT. n. f. [mis and management.] Ill management; ill conduct.
It is mismanagement more than want of abilities, that men have reason to complain of in those that differ from them. Locke.
The falls of fav'rites, projects of the great,
Of old mismanagements, taxations new. Pope.
TO MISMARK. v. a. [mis and mark.] To mark with the wrong token.
Things are mismarked in contemplation and life for want of application or integrity. Collier on human Reason.
TO MISMATCH. v. a. [mis and match.] To match unlitably.

MIS

What at my years forsaken! had I
Ugly, or old, mispatch to my desires,
My natural defects had taught me
To let me down contented. Southern's Spartan Dame.
TO MISNAME. v. a. [mis and name.] To call by the wrong name.
They make one man's fancies, or perhaps failings, confining laws to others, and convey them as such to their successors, who are bold to misname all unobsequiousness to their inconistency, presumption. Boyle on Colours.
MISNOMER. n. f. [French.] In law, an indictment, or any other act vacated by a wrong name.
TO MISOMER. v. a. [mis and omere.] Not to observe accurately.
They understand it as early as they do language; and, if I misomere not, they love to be treated as rational creatures sooner than is imagined. Locke on Education.
MISOGAMIST. n. f. [misos and gamos.] A marriage hater.
MISOGYNY. n. f. [misos and gyn.] Hatred of women.
TO MISORDER. v. a. [mis and order.] To conduct ill; to manage irregularly.
If the child mis either in forgetting a word, or misorder- ing the sentence, I would not have the master frown. Asham.
Yet few of them come to any great age, by reason of their misordered life when they were young. Asham.
The time misorder'd doth in common sense
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. ii.
MISORDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Irregularity; disorderly proceedings.
When news was brought to Richard the second, that his uncles, who fought to reform the misorders of his coun-sillers, were assembled in a wood near unto the court, merrily demanded of one Sir Hugh a Linne, who had been a good military man, but was then somewhat distraught of his wits, what he would advise him to do? Illue out, quoth Sir Hugh, and slay them every mother's son; and when thou hast so done, thou hast killed all the faithful friends thou hast in England. Camden's Remains.
MISORDERLY. adj. [from misorder.] Irregular.
His over-much fearing of you drives him to seek some mis- orderly shift, to be helped by some other book, or to be prompted by some other scholar. Asham's Schoolmaster.
TO MISPEL. v. a. [mis and pell.] To spell wrong.
She became a profest enemy to the arts and sciences, and scarce ever wrote a letter to him without wilfully mispeeling his name. Spectator, No. 635.
TO MISPEND. v. a. preterite and part. passive mispend. [mis
and pend.]
1. To spend ill; to waste; to consume to no purpose; to throw away.
What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, gathering and venting news. Boyle, Johnson's Dictionary.
First guilty conscience does the narrow bring;
Then sharp remorse shoots out her angry sting;
And anxious thoughts, within themselves at strife,
Upbraid the long mispend, luxurious life. Dryden.
I this writer's want of sense arraign,
Treat all his empty pages with disdain,
And think a grave reply mispend and vain. Blackmore.
He who has lived with the greatest care will find, upon a review of his time, that he has something to redeem; but he who has mispend much has still a greater concern. Rogers.
Wife men retrieve, as far as they are able, every mispend or unprofitable hour which has slipped from them. Rogers.
2. To waste, with the reciprocal pronoun.
Now let the arched knife their thirty limbs
Dissever, for the genial moisture due
To apples, otherwise mispend itself
In barren twigs. Philips.
MISPENDER. n. f. [from mispend.] One who spends ill or prodigally.
I very much suspect the excellency of those mens parts who are dissolute, and careless mispenders of their time. Norris's Misch.
MISPERSUASION. n. f. [mis and persuasion.] Wrong notions; false opinion.
Some mispersuasions concerning the Divine Attributes tend to the corrupting mens manners. Decay of Piety.
TO MISPLACE. v. a. [mis and place.] To put in a wrong place.
I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders.
Before I'll see the crown so foul misplace'd. Shakespeare.
What little arts govern the world! we need not
An armed enemy or corrupted friend,
When service but misplace'd, or love mistaken, Performs the work. Denham's Sophy.
Is a man betrayed by such agents as he employs? He mis- placed his confidence, took hypocrisy for fidelity, and so relied upon the services of a pack of villains. South's Sermons.

MIS

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity; we, who could no way foresee the effect? Atterbury's Sermons.
TO MISPOINT. v. a. [mis and point.] To confuse sentences by wrong punctuation.
TO MISPRISE. v. a. Sometimes it signifies mistaken, from the French verb mispriandre; sometimes undervalued or disdained, from the French verb mepriiser. Hammer. It is in both senses wholly obsolete.
1. To mistake.
You spend your passion on a mispri'd mood;
I am not guilty of Lyfander's blood. Shakespeare.
2. To slight; to scorn; to despise.
He's so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people who best know him, that I am altogether
mispri'd. Shakespeare, As you like it.
Pluck indignation on thy head;
By the mispri'ing of a maid, too virtuous
For the contempt of empire. Shakespeare.
MISPRISON. n. f. [from mispri'ise.]
1. Scorn; contempt.
Here take her hand,
Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift!
That doth in vile mispri'ison shackle up
My love, and her desert. Shakespeare.
2. Mistake; misconception.
Thou hast mistaken quite,
And laid thy love juice on some true love's sight;
Of thy mispri'ison must perforce ensue
Some true love turn'd, and not a false turn'd true. Shakespeare.
We feel such or such a sentiment within us, and heretofore no cheat or mispri'ison; it is truly so, and our sense concludes nothing of its file. Glavinville's Scep.
3. [In common law.] It signifies neglect, negligence, or oversight. Mispri'ison of treason is the concealment, or not disclosing, of known treason; for the which the offenders are to suffer imprisonment during the king's pleasure, lose their goods and the profits of their lands during their lives. Mispri- son of felony, is the letting any person, committed for treason or felony, or suspicion of either, to go before he be indicted. Cowel.
TO MISPROPORTION. v. a. [mis and proportion.] To join without due proportion.
MISPROUD. adj. [mis and proud.] Vitiously proud. Obsolete.
Now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt, Impairing Henry, strengthning misproud York. Shakespeare.
TO MISQUOTE. v. a. [mis and quote.] To quote falsely.
Look how we cut, or fail, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
After all the care I have taken, there may be several passages misquod. Arbutnot on Coins.
TO MISRECITE. v. a. [mis and recite.] To recite not according to the truth.
He misrecites the argument, and denies the consequence, which is clear. Bishop Bramhall against Hobbes.
TO MISRECKON. v. a. [mis and reckon.] To reckon wrong;
to compute wrong.
Whoever finds a mistake in the sum total, must allow himself out, though after repeated trials he may not see in which article he has misreckoned. Swift.
TO MISRELATE. v. a. [mis and relate.] To relate inaccurately or falsely.
To satisfy me that he misrelated not the experiment, he brought two or three small pipes of glass, which gave me the opportunity of trying it. Boyle.
MISRELATION. n. f. [from misrelate.] False or inaccurate narrative.
Mine aim was only to press home those things in writing, which had been agitated between us by word of mouth; a course much to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being less subject to mistakes and misrelations, and wherein pa-ralogisms are more quickly detected. Bishop Bramhall.
TO MISREMEMBER. v. a. [mis and remember.] To mistake by trusting to memory.
If I much misremember not, I had such a spirit from peas kept long enough to lose their verdure. Boyle.
TO MISREPORT. v. a. [mis and report.] To give a false account of; to give an account disadvantageous and false.
His doctrine was misreported, as though he had everywhere preached this, not only concerning the Gentiles, but also touching the Jews. Hooker, b. iv.
A man that never yet
Did, as he vouches, misreport your grace. Shakespeare.
The wrong judgment that misleads us, and makes the will often fasten on the worse side, lies in misreporting upon the various comparisons of these. Locke.
MISREPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] False account; false and malicious representation.
We defend him not,
Only desire to know his crime: 'tis possible
It may be some mistake or misreport,
Some false suggestion, or malicious scandal. Denham.

MIS

As by flattery a man is usually brought to open his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction, and a slanderous mis- report of persons, he is often brought to shut the same event to his best and truest friends. South's Sermons.
TO MISREPRESENT. v. a. [mis and represent.] To represent not as it is; to falsify to disadvantage; mis often signifies not only error, but malice or mischief.
Two qualities necessary to a reader before his judgment should be allowed are, common honesty and common sense; and that no man could have misrepresented that paragraph, unless he were utterly destitute of one or both. Swift.
While it is so difficult to learn the springs of some facts, and so easy to forget the circumstances of others, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the publick by curious and inquisitive heads, who proceed altogether upon conjectures. Swift.
MISREPRESENTATION. n. f. [from misrepresent.]
1. The act of misrepresenting.
They have prevailed by misrepresentations, and other artifices, to make the successor look upon them as the only persons he can trust. Swift.
2. Account maliciously false.
Since I have shewn him his foul mistakes and injurious misrepresentations, it will become him publickly to own and retract them. Atterbury.
MISRULE. n. f. [mis and rule.] Tumult; confusion; revel;
unjust domination.
In the portal plac'd, the heav'n-born maid,
Enormous riot, and misrule survey'd. Pope.
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest, is for ever heard. Thomson.
MISS. n. f. [contracted from mistress.] Bailey.
1. The term of honour to a young girl.
Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are great impediments to the diversions of the servants. Su.
2. A strumpet; a concubine; a whore; a prostitute.
All women would be of one piece,
The virtuous matron and the miss. Hudibras, p. iii.
This gentle cock, for solace of his life,
Six misses had besides his lawful wife. Dryden.
TO MISS. v. a. [missen, Dutch and German.] Miss'd preter.
miss part.
1. Not to hit by the mind; to mistake.
Nor can I miss the way, so strongly drawn
By this new-felt attraction, and instinct. Milton.
2. Not to hit by manual aim.
The life you boasted to your jav'lin giv'n,
Prince, you have miss'd. Pope.
3. To fail of obtaining.
If the desired above all things to have Orgalus, Orgalus feared nothing but to miss Parthenia. Sidney.
So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that, which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
Where shall a maid's distracted heart find rest,
If the can miss it in her lover's breast? Dryden.
When a man misses his great end, happiness, he will acknowledge he judged not right. Locke.
4. To discover something to be unexpectedly wanting.
Without him I found a weakness, and a mistrustfulness of myself, as one strayed from his best strength, when at any time I miss'd him. Sidney.
In vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was miss'd. 1 Sam. xxv. 21.
5. To be without.
We cannot miss him; he does make our fire,
Fetch in our wood. Shakespeare's Tempest.
6. To omit.
She would never miss one day,
A walk so fine, a sight so gay. Prior.
7. To perceive want of.
My redoubt'd love and care,
May ever tend about thee to old age
With all things grateful cheer'd, and so supply'd,
That what by me thou hast lost thou least shalt miss. Mit.
He who has a firm, sincere friend, may want all the rest without missing them. South's Sermons.
TO MISS. v. n.
1. To fly wide; not to hit.
Flying bullets now
To execute his rage, appear too slow,
They miss or sweep but common souls away. Waller.
2. Not to succeed.
The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other. Bacon.
3. To fail; to mistake.
4. To be lost; to be wanting.
My lord,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

 For a time caught up to God, as once
 Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
 And the great Thibite, who on fiery wheels Rode up to heaven, yet once again to come. Milt. Par. R.
 5. To miscarry; to fail.
 Th' invention all admir'd, and each, how he
 To be th' inventor mis'd, to easy it seem'd,
 Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
 6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.
 Gritus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Kneller.
 The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury's Sermons.
Miss, n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Loss; want.
 In humble dales is footing fast,
 The rode is not so tickle,
 And though one fall through heedless haste,
 Yet is his miss not tickle. Spenser's Pastoral.
 I could have better spar'd a better man.
 Oh, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
 If I were much in love with vanity. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
 If these papers have that evidence in them, there will be no great miss of those which are lost, and my reader may be satisfied without them. Locke.
 2. Mistake; error.
 He did without any great miss in the hardest points of grammar. Asham's Schoolmaster.
Missal, n. f. [missale, Lat. missal, Fr.] The mass book.
 By the rubrick of the missal, in every solemn mass, the priest is to go up to the middle of the altar. Stillington.
 To Miss'y, v. n. [mis and sey.] To say ill or wrong.
 Their ill haviour garres men missy,
 Both of their doctrine and their fay. Spenser's Poet.
 Diggon Davie, I bid her godday,
 Or Diggon her is, or I missy. Spenser's Poet.
 We are not dwarfs, but of equal stature, if Vives missy

 To Miss'em, v. n. [mis and seem.]
 1. To make false appearance.
 Foul Dueffa meet,
 Who with her witchcraft and missembling sweet Inveigled her to follow her desires unmeet. Fairy Queen.
 2. To misbecome. Obsolete both.
 Never knight I saw in such missembling plight. Fa. Qu.
 To Miss'y, v. a. [mis and serve.] To serve unfaithfully.
 Great men, who misserved their country, were fined very highly. Arbutnot on Coins.
 To Miss'y, v. a. part. misshapen and misshapen. [mis and shape.] To shape ill; to form ill; to deform.
 A rude misshapen, monstrous rablement. Fa. Qu.
 His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
 And that misformed shape, misshapen more. Fairy Queen.
 Him then she does transform to monstrous hues,
 And horribly misshapen with ugly fights,
 Captiv'd eternally in iron mews. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 This misshapen knave, Shakespeare's Tempest.
 His mother was a witch. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 And will the yet debate her eyes on me,
 On me that halt and am misshapen thus. Shak. Rich. III.
 Let the misshapen trunk that bears this head
 Be round impaled with a glorious crown. Shakespeare.
 Pride will have a fall: the beautiful trees go all to the wreck here, and only the misshapen and despicable dwarf is left standing. L'Estrange.
 Pluto hates his own misshapen race,
 Her filter furies fly her hideous face. Dryden's Æn.
 They make bold to destroy ill-formed and misshapen productions. Locke.
 The Alps broken into so many steps and precipices, form one of the most irregular, misshapen scenes in the world. Addis.
 We ought not to believe that the banks of the ocean are really deformed, because they have not the form of a regular bulwark; nor that the mountains are misshapen, because they are not exact pyramids or cones. Bentley's Sermons.
 Some figures monstrous and misshapen appear Consider'd singly, or beheld too near,
 Which but proportion'd to their site or place,
 Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.
 2. In Shakespeare, perhaps, it once signifies ill directed: as, to shape a course.
 Thy wit, that ornament to shape and love,
Misshapen in the conduct of them both,
 Like powder in a skill-less soldiers flask,
 Is set on fire. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
Missile, adj. [missilis, Lat.] Thrown by the hand; striking at distance.
 We bend the bow, or wing the missile dart. Pope.

MIS

Mission, n. f. [missio, Latin.]
 1. Commission; the state of being sent by supreme authority.
 Her son tracing the desert wild,
 All his great work to come before him set,
 How to begin, how to accomplish best,
 His end of being on earth, and mission high. Milt. Po. Reg.
 The divine authority of our mission, and the powers vested in us by the high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus, are publicly disputed and denied. Atterbury.
 2. Persons sent on any account, usually to propagate religion.
 In these ships there should be a mission of three of the brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the sciences, manufactures, and inventions of all the world, and bring us books and patterns; and that the brethren should stay abroad till the new mission. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 3. Dismission; discharge. Not in use.
 In Celar's army, somewhat the soldiers would have had, yet only demanded a mission or discharge, though with no intention it should be granted, but thought to wrench him in their other desires; whereupon with one cry they asked mis- san. Bacon's Apophth.
 4. Faction; party. Not in use.
 Glorious deeds, in these fields of late,
 Made emulous missions amongst the gods themselves,
 And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.
MISSIONARY, n. f. [missionaire, French.] One sent to propagate religion.
 You mention the presbyterian missionary, who hath been persecuted for his religion. Swift.
 Like mighty missioner you come,
 Ad partes infidelium. Dryden.
MISSIVE, adj. [missive, French.]
 1. Such as may be sent.
 The king grants a licence under the great seal, called a congé d'ellire, to elect the person he has nominated by his letters missive. Asyliff's Paragon.
 2. Used at distance.
 In vain with darts a distant war they try,
 Short, and more short, the missive weapons fly. Dryden.
MISSIVE, n. f. [French.]
 1. A letter sent; it is retained in Scotland in that sense.
 Great aids came in to him; partly upon missives, and partly voluntaries from many parts. Bacon's Henry VII.
 2. A messenger.
 Rioting in Alexandria, you
 Did pocket up my letters; and with taunts
 Did gibe my missive out of audience. Shakespeare.
 While wrapt in the wonder of it came missives from the king, who all hail'd me thence of Cawder. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
MISSPEAK, v. a. [mis and speak.] To speak wrong.
 It is not so; thou hast misspoken, misheard;
 Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 A mother delights to hear
 Her early child misspeak half-utter'd words. Dante.
MIST, n. f. [mys, Saxon.]
 1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.
 Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
 To us discovers day from far;
 His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
 Which our dark nation long involv'd. Dante.
 And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
 And clouds dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Reformation.
 As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watry cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Greene.
 But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
 And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden.
 A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.
 2. Any thing that dims or darkens.
 My peoples eyes were once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are soon misted into the most desperate actions. King Charles.
 His passion cast a mist before his sense,
 And either made or magnify'd th' offence. Dryden.
 To Mist, v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.
 Lend me a looking-glass;
 If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
 Why then the lives. Shakespeare, King Lear.
MISTAKABLE, adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.
 It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakable numbers. Bacon.
 Tq

MIS

To MISTAKE, v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.
 The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mistaken. Sidney.
 These did truly apprehend a great affinity between their practice of invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other.
Stillington.
 This if neglected will make the reader very much mistake, and misunderstand his meaning, and render the sense very perplexed. Locke.
 Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mis- taken for solid. Locke.
 Fools into the notion fall,
 That vice or virtue there is none at all;
 Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,
 'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain. Pope.
 To MISTAKE, v. n. To err; not to judge right.
 Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green. Locke.
 Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding, among friends. Swift.
MISTAKEN, pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.
 This dagger hath mistaken; for lo! the sheath
 Lies empty on the back of Mountague,
 The point mischeated in my daughter's bosom. Shakespeare.
 To be MISTAKEN. To err.
 England is so idly king'd.
 — You are too much mistaken in this king:
 Question, your grace, the late embassadors,
 How modest in exception, and withal
 How terrible in constant resolution. Shakespeare, Henry V.
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
 But cut the band of union with that stroke. Waller.
MISTAKE, n. f. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.
 He never hath find out fit mate; but such As some misfortune brings him, or mistake. Milton.
 Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes. Tilley.
 Those terrors are not to be charged upon religion, which proceed either from the want of religion, or superstitious mis- takes about it. Bentley's Sermons.
MISTAKINGLY, adv. [from mistaking.] Erroneously; falsely.
 The error is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall which does indeed belong to the object. Boyle on Colours.
 To MISTAKE, v. a. [mis and take.] To state wrong.
 They mistake the question, when they talk of preling ceremonies. Bishop Sanderson.
 To MISTAKE, v. a. [mis and teach.] To teach wrong.
 Such guides shall be set over the several congregations as will be sure to misteach them. Bishop Sanderson.
 The extravagances of the lowliest life are the more consummate disorders of a misteach or neglected youth. L'Estrange's Fables.
 To MISTE, v. a. [mis and tell.] To tell unfaithfully or inaccurately.
 To MISTEMPER, v. a. [mis and temper.] To temper ill; to disorder.
 This inundation of mistemper'd humour
 Refts by you only to be qualified. Shakespeare, King John.
MISTE, adj. [from mister, trade, French.] What mister, what kind of.
 The redcross knight toward him crossed fast,
 To weet what mister wight was so dismay'd,
 There him he finds all senseless and aghast. Spenser.
 To MISTE, v. a. [mis and tem.] To term erroneously.
 Hence banished, is banish'd from the world;
 And world exil'd is death. That banished
 Is death mistem'd. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
 To MISTHINK, v. a. [mis and think.] To think ill; to think wrong.
 How will the country, for these woful chances,
Misthink the king, and not be falsify'd. Shakespeare.
 We, the greatest, are misthought. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
 For things that others do. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
 Thoughts! which how found they harbour in thy breast,
 Adam! Misthought of her to thee so dear? Milton.
 To MISTIME, v. a. [mis and time.] Not to time right; not to adapt properly with regard to time.
Mistress, n. f. [from mys.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.
 The speedy depredation of air upon watry moisture, and venion of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbibe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 91.

MIS

MISTION, n. f. [from mys, Latin.] The state of being mingled.
 In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mysion, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion. Browne.
 Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mysion, produce colour. Boyle on Colours.
MISTLETOE, n. f. [myrtelan, Saxon; mysel, Danish, bird- lime, and ran, a twig.] A plant.
 The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bafon, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is produced in the female flowers is placed in a remote part of the plant from the male flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed: this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, as most other plants, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plaut, who thought it to be an excrescence on the tree without the seed being previously lodged there, which opinion is now generally confuted. The manner of its propagation is as follows, viz. the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree; for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this vis-cous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: it is observable, that whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities. Milner.
 If snow do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
 Crave mistle and ivie for them to spare. Tusser's Husb.
 A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
 The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean;
 Overcome with mofs, and baleful mistletoe. Shakespeare.
Mistletoe groweth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the mistletoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glittering berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth. Bacon.
 All your temples shew
 With laurel green, and sacred mistletoe. Gay's Trivia.
MISTLIKE, adj. [mysl and like.] Resembling a mist.
 Good Romeo, hide thyself!
 — Not I, unless the breath of heart-sick groans,
Mistlike unfold me from the search of eyes. Shakespeare.
MISTOLD, particip. pass. of mistle.
MISTOK, particip. pass. of mistle.
 Look nymphs, and shepherds look,
 What sudden blaze of majesty,
 Too divine to be mistook. Milton.
MISTRESS, n. f. [maistrisse, maitresse, French.]
 1. A woman who governs: correlative to subject or to servant.
 Here stood he in the dark, his sharp sword out,
 Mumbling of wicked charms, conjuring the moon
 To stand 's auspicious mistress. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 Some welcome for the mistress of the house. Shakespeare.
 Like the lily,
 That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,
 I'll hang my head and perish. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 He'll make your Paris louvre shake for it,
 Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe. Shakespeare.
 I will not charm my tongue; I'm bound to speak.
 My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed. Shakespeare, Othello.
 The late queen's gentlewoman! a knight's daughter!
 To be her mistress! the queen's queen. Shakespeare.
 Rome now is mistress of the whole world, sea and land, to either pole. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.
 Wonder not, for mistress! if perhaps Thou can't, who art sole wonder; much less arm
 Thy looks, the heav'n of mildness, with disdain. Milton.
 Those who assert the lunar orb presides
 O'er humid bodies, and the ocean guides;
 Whose waves obsequious ebb, or swelling run
 With the declining or encreasing moon;
 With reason seem her empire to maintain
 As mistress of the rivers and the main.
 What a miserable spectacle, for a nation that had been mistress at sea so long!
 2. A woman who possesses faculties uninjured.
 There had the enjoyed herself while she was mistress of herself, and had no other thoughts but such as might arise out of quiet senses. Sidney, b. ii.

 He sees he can hardly approach greatness, but, as a mated cattle, he must first pass the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Pref. to Aurengzebe.
MOB. n. f. [contracted from mobile, Latin.] The crowd; a tumultuous rout.
 Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; a very monster in a Bartholomew-fair, for the mob to gaze at. Dryden.
 Dreams are but interludes, which fancy makes,
 When monarch reason sleeps, this mimic wakes;
 Compounds a medley of disjointed things,
 A court of coblers, and a mob of kings. Dryden.
 A cluster of mob were making themselves merry with their better. Addison's Freeholders, N<sup>o</sup>. 44.
MOB. n. f. A kind of female head-dress.
 To MOB. v. a. [from the noun.] To harass, or overbear by tumult.
MO'BISH. adj. [from mob.] Mean; done after the manner of the mob.
 To MOBLE. v. a. [sometimes written mable, perhaps by a ludicrous allusion to the French je m'habille.] To dress grossly or inelegantly.
 But who, oh! hath seen the nobled queen,
 Run barefoot up and down. Shaksp. Hamlet.
MOBBY. n. f. An American drink made of potatoes.
MO'BILE. n. f. [mobile, French.] The populace; the rout; the mob.
 Long experience has found it true of the unthinking mobile, that the clover they shut their eyes the wider they open their hands. South's Sermons.
 The mobile are uneasy without a ruler, they are restless with one. L'Estrange's Fables.
MOBILITY. n. f. [mobilité, Fr. mobilitas, Latin.]
 1. Nimbleness; activity.
 Iron, having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude. Watson.
 The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.
 The Romans had the advantage by the bulk of their ships, and the fleet of Antiochus in the swiftness and mobility of theirs, which served them in great stead in the fight. Arbut.
 You tell, it is ingenuit, active force,
Mobility, or native power to move Words, which mean nothing. Blackmore.
 2. [In cant language.] The populace.
 She singled you out with her eye as commander in chief of the mobility. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 3. Fickleness; inconstancy.
MO'CHO-STONE. n. f. [from Mocha, therefore more properly Mocha-stone.]
Mocha-stones are nearly related to the agat kind, of a clear horny grey, with declinations representing mosses, shrubs, and branches, in black, brown, or red, in the substance of the stone. Woodward.
 To MOCK. v. a. [moquer, French; moccio, Welsh.]
 1. To deride; to laugh at; to ridicule.
 All the regions
 Do seemingly revolt; and who resist
 Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
 And perish constant fools. Shakspere's Coriolanus.
 Many thousand widows,

Mock. adj. False; counterfeit; not real.
 The mock astrologer, El astrologo fingido. Dryden.
 That superior greatness and mock majesty, which is ascribed to the prince of fallen angels, is admirably preserved. Spett.
MOCKABLE. adj. [from mock.] Exposed to derision.
 Those that are good manners at the court, are as ridiculous in the country, as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at court. Shaksp. As you like it.
MOCK-PRIVET. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.
MOCK-WILLOW. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.
MOCKEL. adj. [the same with mickle. See MICKLE. This word is variously written mickle, mickel, machil, machel, muckle.] Much; many.
 The body bigg, and mightily pight,
 Thoroughly rooted, and wondrous height,
 Whilom had been the king of the field,
 And mockell mast to the husband did yield. Spenser.
MO'CKER. n. f. [from mock.]
 1. One who mocks; a scoffer; a derider.
 Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. Shakspere.
 Let them have a care how they intrude upon so great and holy an ordinance, in which God is so seldom mocked but it is to the mockers confusion. South's Sermons.
 2. A deceiver; an elusory impostor.
MOCKERY. n. f. [moquerie, Latin.]
 1. Derision; scorn; sportive insult.
 The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen
 The laughing-stock of fortune's mockeries, Am the only daughter of a king and queen. Fa. Qu.
 Why should publick mockery in print be a better test of truth than severe railing sarcasms. Watt.
 2. Ridicule; contemptuous merriment.
 A new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery; an art of contradiction by way of scorn, where-with we were long fustice forewarned. Hooker, b. v.
 3. Sport; subject of laughter.
 What cannot be preserv'd when fortune takes,
 Patience her injury a mockery makes. Shaksp. Othello.
 Of the holy place they made a mockery. 2 Mac. viii. 17.
 It is as the air, invulnerable;
 And our vain blows malicious mockery. Shaksp. Hamlet.
 4. Vanity of attempt; delusory labour; vain effort.
 Imitation; counterfeit appearance; vain show.
 To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
 Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakspere.
 What though no friends in fable weeds appear,
 Grieve for an hour, perhaps, then mourn a year,
 And bear about the mockery of woe

MO'CKING-STOCK. n. f. [mocking and stock.] A butt for merriment.
MO'DAL. adj. [modale, Fr. modalis, Latin.] Relating to the form or mode, not the essence.
 When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal diversity. Glanville's Scyp.
MODALITY. n. f. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.
 The motions of the mouth by which the voice is discriminated, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial. Holder.
MODE. n. f. [mode, Fr. modus, Latin.]
 1. Form; external variety; accidental discrimination; accident.
 A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always effected as belonging to, and subsisting by, the help of some substance, which, for that reason, is called its subject. Watt's Logick, p. i.
 Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Watt's Logick.
 2. Gradation; degree.
 What modes of light betwixt each wide extreme,
 The mole's dim curtain, and the linx's beam;
 Of smell, the headlong lions between,
 And hound fagacious on the tainted green. Pope.
 3. Manner; method; form; fashion.
 Our Saviour beheld
 A table richly spread, in regal mode,
 With dithes pil'd. Milton's Par. Reg. b. ii.
 The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found. Taylor's Guide to a Penitent.
 4. State; appearance.
 My death
 Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd, Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort,
 For thou the garland wear'st successively. Shakspere.
 5. [Mode, French.] Fashion; custom.
 There are certain garbs and modes of speaking, which vary with the times; the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Dowbar.
 We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid curiosities of mode and imagination. L'Estrange.
 They were invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.
 As we see on coins the different faces of persons, we see too their different habits and dresses, according to the mode that prevailed. Addison on ancient Medals.
 If faith itself has different dresses worn,
 What wonder modes in wit should take their turn? Pope.
MODEL. n. f. [modele, French; modulus, Latin.]
 1. A representation in miniature of something made or done.
 I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
 Limit each leader to his several charge,
 And part in just proportion our small strength. Shaksp.
 You have the models of several ancient temples, though the temples and the gods are perished. Addison.
 2. A copy to be imitated.
 A fault it would be if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker, b. v.
 They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform to their models what they call religion. K. Charles.
 3. A mould; any thing which shows or gives the shape of that which it incloses.
 Nothing can we call our own but death;
 And that small model of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. Shaksp.
 Standard; that by which any thing is measured.
 As he who presumes steps into the throne of God, so he that despairs measures providence by his own little contracted model. South's Sermons.
 4. In Shakspere it seems to have two unexampled senses.
 Something formed or produced.
 I have commended to his goodness
 The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter. Shak.
 5. Something small and diminutive; which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.
 England! model to thy inward greatness,
 Like little body with a mighty heart. Shakspere.
 To MO'DEL. v. a. [modeler, French.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.
 When they come to model heav'n,
 And calculate the stars, how they will wield
 The mighty frame. Milton's Par. Reg. b. viii.
 The government is modelled after the same manner with that of the Cantons, as much as to form a community can imitate those of so large an extent. Addison on Italy.

MODERATE. adj. [moderatus, Lat. moderé, Fr.]
 1. Temperate; not excessive.
 Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating, but paings of the belly are with an insatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.
 2. Not hot of temper.
 A number of moderate members managed with so much art as to obtain a majority, in a thin house, for passing a vote, that the king's concessions were a ground for a future settlement. Swift.
 3. Not luxurious; not expensive.
 There's not so much left as to furnish out
 A moderate table. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
 4. Not extreme in opinion; not sanguine in a tenet.
 These are tenets which the *moderate*st of the Romanists will not venture to affirm. Smalbridge.
 Fix'd to one part, but moderate to the rest. Pope.
 5. Placed between extremes; holding the mean.
 Quietly consider the trial that hath been thus long had of both kinds of reformation; as well this moderate kind, which the church of England hath taken, as that other more extreme and rigorous, which certain churches elsewhere have better liked. Hooker, b. iv.
 6. Of the middle rate.
 More moderate gifts might have prolong'd his date,
 Too early fitted for a better state. Dryden.
 To MO'DERATE. v. a. [moderare, Latin; moderer, Fr.]
 1. To regulate; to restrain; to still; to pacify; to quiet; to repress.
 With equal measure she did moderate
 The strong extremities of their rage. Spenser.
 By its affrighting quality it moderates the relaxing quality of warm water. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. To make temperate.
 Ye swarthy nations of the torrid zone,
 How well to you is this great bounty known?
 For frequent gales from the wide ocean rise
 To fan your air, and moderate your skies. Blackmore.
MO'DERATELY. adv. [from moderate.]
 1. Temperately; mildly.
 2. In a middle degree.
 Each nymph but moderately fair,
 Commands with no less rigor here. Waller.
 Blood in a healthy state, when let out, its red part should congeal strongly and soon, in a moderately tough, and swim in the serum. Arbutnot on Aliments.
MO'DERATENESS. n. f. [from moderate.] State of being moderate; temperateness.
MODERATION. n. f. [moderatio, Latin.]
 1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.
 Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation? Hooker, b. iv.
 A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly tempered with candor and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation. Atterbury's Sermons.
 In moderation placing all my glory,
 While tories call me whigs, and whigs a tory. Pope.
 2. Calmness of mind; equanimity. [moderation, Fr.]
 Equally inur'd
 By moderation either state to bear, Prosperous, or adverse. Milt. Par. Reg. b. xi.
 3. Frugality in expence. Ainsworth.
MODERATOR. n. f. [moderator, Lat. moderator, Fr.]
 1. The person or thing that calms or restrains.
 Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Waller's Angler.
 2. One who presides in a disputation, to restrain the contending parties from indecency, and confine them to the question. Sometimes the moderator is more troublesome than the actor. Bacon's Essays.
 How does Philopolis seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long-practised moderator? Mort.
 The first person who speaks when the court is set, opens the case to the judge, chairman, or moderator of the assembly, and gives his own reasons for his opinion. Watt.
MO'DERN. n. f. [moderne, Fr. from modernus, low Latin, supposed a casual corruption of hithernus. Vel potius ab adverbio modo, modernus, ut a die diurnus. Ains.]
 1. Late; recent; not ancient; not antique.
 Some of the ancient, and likewise divers of the modern writers, that have laboured in natural magic, have noted a sympathy between the sun and certain herbs. Bacon.
 The glorious parallels then downward bring

4. Not excessively; with moderation.
MODESTY. n. f. [modestie, Fr. modestas, Latin.]
1. Not arrogance; not presumptuousness.
They cannot, with modesty, think to have found out absolutely the best which the wit of men may devise. Hooker.
2. Not impudence; not forwardness.
3. Moderation; decency.
A lord will hear you play;
But I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left over eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion. Shakespeare.
4. Chastity; purity of manners.
Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shews? But she is more,
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakespeare.
Of the general becoming care; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.
Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Clarissa.
MODESTY-PIECE. n. f.
A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison's Guard. N° 118.
MODICUM. n. f. [Latin.] Small portion; pittance.
What modicum of wit he utters: his evaluations have ears thus long. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.
Though hard their fate,
A cruise of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudge'd that modicum. Dryden.

MOH

- MODIFIABLE. adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.
It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable, essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter; but the manner how I see either fill escapes my comprehension. Lact.
MODIFICABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.
MODIFICATION. n. f. [modification, French.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of form or mode.
The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth. Heller's Elements of Speech.
The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light, are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton's Optics.
If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Beault.
To MODIFY. v. a. [modifier, French.]
1. To change the form or accidents of any thing; to shape.
Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs, that they modify and differentiate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.
The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton's Optics.
2. To soften; to moderate.
After all this dilaunting and modifying upon the matter,
there is hazard on the yielding side. LEStrange.
Of his grace
He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.
MODILLON. n. f. [French; modulus, Lat.]
Modillions, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projection of the larnier or drip: this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillions, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.
The modillions or dentelli make a noble show by their graceful projections. Speator, N° 445.
MODISH. adj. [from mode.] Fashionable; formed according to the reigning custom.
But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With am'rous songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryd.
Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city; the modish hypocrite endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Addison's Spect. N° 399.
MODISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.
Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly. Lact.
MODISHNESS. n. f. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.
To MODULATE. v. a. [modulus, Latin.] To form found to a certain key, or to certain notes.
The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, weasel, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the belly, all serve to make or modulate the found. Gravel's Censur.
Could any person so modulate her voice as to derive so many. Brown's Notes on the Othello.
Echo propagates around
Each charm of modulated found. Ann.
MODULATION. n. f. [from modulate; modulation, Fr.]
1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.
The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixt: the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Whewell's Elem. of Nat. Phil.
The speech, as it is a found resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but, as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognation with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers of human souls clothed in flesh. Government of the Tongue.
2. Sound modulated; agreeable harmony.
Innumerable songsters, in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thompson's Spring.
MODULATOR.

MOI

- MODULATOR. n. f. [from modulate.] He who forms founds to a certain key; a tuner; that which modulates.
The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of mastication. Dryden.
MODULUS. n. f. [modulus, Latin.] An empty representation; a model.
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered;
And then, all this thou seest, is but a clod
And modulus of confounded royalty. Shakespeare, King John.
MODUS. n. f. [Latin.] Something paid as a compensation for rites on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.
One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the tithe of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth part of the product. Swift.
MODVALL. n. f. A bird. Ans.
MOE. adj. [ma, Saxon. See Mo.] More; a greater number.
The chronicles of England mention no moe than only six kings bearing the name of Edward since the conquest, therefore it cannot be there should be more. Hooker, b. ii.
MOHAIR. n. f. [mohair, mair, Fr.] Thread or stuff made of camels or other hair.
She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest,
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how much a chintz exceeds mohair. Pope.
MOHOC. n. f. The name of a cruel nation of America given to ruffians who infested, or rather were imagined to infest, the streets of London.
From milk-top he starts up mohock. Prior.
Who has not trembled at the mohock's name? Gay.
Thou hast fallen upon me with the rage of a mad dog, or a mohock. Dennis.
MOHBERED. adj. Crazed.
MOHORE. n. f. [mohore, Fr.] A Portugal coin, rated at one pound seven shillings.
MOHETY. n. f. [mohety, French, from moien, the middle.]
Half; one of two equal parts.
This company being divided into two equal moheties, the one before, the other since the coming of Christ; that part which, since the coming of Christ, partly hath embraced, and partly shall embrace, the Christian religion, we term as by a more proper name, the church of Christ. Hooker, b. iii.
The death of Antony
Is not a single doom, in that name lay
A mohety of the world. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Say, that were gone,
Given to the fire, a mohety of my self Might come to me. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
Touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Forgive a mohety of the principal. Shakespeare.
The militia was settled, a mohety of which should be nominated by the king, and the other mohety by the parliament. Cl.
As this is likely to produce a cessation of arms among one half of our island, it is reasonable that the more beautiful mohety of his majesty's subjects should establish a truce. Addison.
To MOIL. v. a. [moiller, French.]
1. To dawdle with dirt.
All they which were left were moiled with dirt and mire by reason of the deepness of the rotten way. Knutley.
2. To weary.
No more tug one another thus, nor moil yourselves, receive Prize equal. Chapman's Iliad.
To MOIL. v. n. [moiller, French.]
1. To labour in the mire.
Moil not too much under-ground, for the hope of mines is very uncertain. Bacon's Essays.
2. To toil; to drudge.
They toil and moil for the interest of their masters, that in requital break their hearts; and the freer they are of their flesh, the more scandalous is the bondage. LEStrange.
Oh the endless misery of the life I lead! cries the moiling husband; to spend all my days in ploughing.
Now he must moil, and drudge, for one he loaths. Dry.
With thee 'twas Marian's dear delight
To moil all day, and merry-make at night. Gay's Past.
MOIST. adj. [moiste, moite, French.]
1. Wet, not dry; wet, not liquid; wet in a small degree.
Why were the moist in number so outdone,
That to a thousand dry they are but one. Blackmore.
Many who live well in a dry air, fall into all the diffeates that depend upon a relaxation in a moist one. Arbutnot.
Nor yet, when moist Arcturus clouds the sky,
The woods and fields their pleating toils deny. Pope.
2. Juicy; succulent. Ans.
To MOISTEN. v. a. [from moist.] To make damp; to make Write till your ink be dry; and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line. Shakespeare.

MOL

- His breasts are full of milk, and his bones are moistened with marrow. Jeb xxi. 24.
A pipe a little moistened on the inside, so as there be no drops left, maketh a more solemn sound than if the pipe were dry. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 230.
When torrents from the mountains fall no more, the swelling river is reduced into his shallow bed, with scarce water to moisten his own pebbles. Dryden's Aen.
MOISTENER. n. f. [from moisten.] The person or thing that moistens.
MOISTNESS. n. f. [from moist.] Dampness; wetness in a small degree.
Pleasure both kinds take in the moistness and density of the air. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 823.
The small particles of brick or stone the least moistness would join together. Addison's Guard.
MOISTURE. n. f. [moiteur, Fr. from moist.] Small quantity of water or liquid.
Sometimes angling to a little river near hand, which, for the moisture it bestow'd upon roots of some flourishing trees, was rewarded with their shadow. Sidney.
All my body's moisture
Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heat. Shak.
Set such plants as require much moisture upon sandy, dry grounds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 526.
While dryness moisture, coldness heat refits,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denham.
If some penurious source by chance appear'd
Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him. Addison.
MOKE. n. f. The meshes. Ans.
MOKEY. adj. Dark: as, mokey weather. Ans. It seems a corruption of murky: and in some places they call it muggy, dusky.
MOLE. n. f. [moel, Saxon; mole, Fr. mola, Lat.]
1. A mole is a formless concretion of extravasated blood, which grows unto a kind of flesh in the uterus, and is called a false conception. Quincy.
2. A natural spot or discolouration of the body.
To nourish hair upon the *mole*s of the face, is the perpetuation of a very antient custom. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Such in painting are the warts and *mole*s, which adding a likeness to the face, are not therefore to be omitted. Dryden.
That Timothy Tim and Jack were the same person, was proved, particularly by a mole under the left pap. Arbutnot.
The peculiarities in Homer are marks and *mole*s, by which every common eye distinguishes him. Pope.
3. [From mole, Lat. mole, Fr.] A mound; a dyke.
Sion is freightened on the north side by the sea-ruined wall of the mole. Sandys.
With asphaltick slime the gather'd beach
They fasten'd; and the mole immense wrought on Over the foaming deep high-arch'd; a bridge
Of length prodigious. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
The great quantities of stones dug out of the rock could not easily conceal themselves, had they not been confum'd in the *mole*s and buildings of Naples. Addison on Italy.
Bid the broad arch the dang'rous flood contain,
The mole projected break the roaring main. Pope.
4. A little beast that works under-ground.
I read softly, that the blind mole may not Hear a foot fall; we now are near his cell. Shakespeare.
What is more obvious than a mole, and yet what more palpable argument of Providence? Moré.
*Mole*s have perfect eyes, and holes for them through the skin, not much bigger than a pin's head. Ray on the Creation.
Thy art of building from the bee receive;
Learn of the mole to plow, the worm to weave. Pope.
MOLEBAT. n. f. A fish. Ans.
MOLECAST. n. f. [mole and cast.] Hillock cast up by a mole.
In Spring let the molecasts be spread, because they hinder the mowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.
MOLECATCHER. n. f. [mole and catcher.] One whose employment is to catch moles.
Get molecatcher cunningly moule for to kill,
And harrow and cast abroad every hill. Tupper's Hud.
MOLEHILL. n. f. [mole and hill.] Hillock throwa up by the mole working underground.
You feed your solitariness with the conceits of the poets, whose liberal pens can as easily travel over mountains as molehills. Sidney.
The rocks, on which the salt-sea billows beat,
And Atlas' tops, the clouds in height that pass,
Compar'd to his huge person molehill be. Fairfax.
A churchwarden, to express Saint Martin's in the fields, caused to be engraven a martin sitting upon a molehill between two trees. Peacocks on Blazoning.
Our politician having baffled conscience, must not be non-plused with inferior obligations; and, having leapt over such mountains, lie down before a molehill. South's Sermons.
Mountains,

M O L

Mountains, which to your Maker's view
Seem less than molehills do to you. Roscammun.
Strange ignorance ! that the same man who knows How far yond' mound above this molehill shows,
Should not perceive a difference as great Between small incomes and a vast estate ! Dryden's Juv.
To MOLEST. v. a. [molest, Fr. molestus, Lat.] To disturb ;
to trouble ; to vex.
If they will firmly persist concerning points which hitherto have been disputed of, they must agree that they have molest- ed the church with needless opposition. Hooker, b. iii.
No man shall meddle with them, or molest them in any manner. 1 Mac. c. 35.
Pleasure and pain signify whatsoever delights or molests us.
Locke.
Both are doom'd to death ;
And the dead wake not to molest the living. Rowe.
MOLESTATION. n. f. [molestia, Latin, from molest.] Disturbance ; uneasiness caused by vexation.
Though useless unto us, and rather of molestation, we refrain from killing fallows. Browne's Vulgar Errors.
An internal satisfaction and acquiescence, or dissatisfaction and molestation of spirit, attend the practice of virtue and vice respectively. Norris's Mysel.
MOLESTER. n. f. [from molest.] One who disturbs.
MOLETRACK. n. f. [mole and track.] Course of the mole underground.
The pot-rat is a deep earthen vessel set in the ground, with the brim even with the bottom of the moletracks. Mort.
MOLEWARP. n. f. [mole and warpcan, Saxon.] A mole.
The molewarp's brains mist therewith all,
And with the fame the pimper's gall. Dryden's Nymphid.
MO'LLIEN. adj. [mollis, Latin.] Softening.
MO'LLIFIABLE. adj. [from mollify.] That may be softened.
MO'LLIFICATION. n. f. [from mollify.]
1. The act of mollifying or softening.
For induration or mollification, it is to be inquired what will make metals harder and harder, and what will make them softer and softer. Bacon.
2. Pacification ; mitigation.
Some mollification, sweet lady. Shakepeare.
MO'LLIFIER. n. f. [from mollify.]
1. That which softens ; that which appeases.
The root hath a tender, dainty heat, when ; when it cometh above ground to the sun and air, vanisheth ; for it is a great mollifier. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 863.
2. He that pacifies or mitigates.
To MO'LLIFY. v. a. [mollio, Latin ; mollir, Fr.]
1. To soften ; to make soft.
2. To allvage.
Neither herb, nor mollifying plaister, restored them to health. Wyd. xvi. 12.
Sores have not been clofed, neither bound up, neither mo- lified with ointment. Ibid. i. 6.
3. To appease ; to pacify ; to quiet.
Thinking her silent imaginations bound to work upon some fowhat, to mollify them, as the nature of mulck is to do,
I took up my harp. Sidney, b. ii.
He brought them to these favage parts,
And with sweet science mollify'd their stubborn hearts.
Fairy Queen, b. ii.
The crone, on the wedding-night, finding the knight's aversion, speaks a good word for herself, in hope to mollify
the fullen bridegroom. Dryden.
4. To qualify ; to lessen any thing harsh or burdensome.
They would, by yielding to some things, when they refused others, sooner prevail with the houles to mollify their demands, than at first to reform them. Clarendon, b. viii.
Cowley thus paints Goliath :
The valley, now, this monster seem'd to fill,
And we, methought, look'd up to him from our hill ;
where the two words, feem'd and methought, have mollified
the figure. Dryden's Pref. to his State of Innocence.
MO'LTEN. part. pass. from to moly.
Brais is moltew out of the fcone. Jak xxviii. 2.
In a small furnace made of a temperate heat ; let the heat be low, or may keep the metal moltew, and no more. Bacon.
Fires my mystick from the arizans of Greece
In wounded fcone, or moltew gold expris. Prior.
MO'LY. n. f. [molis, Latin ; moly, French.]
The moly hath pinnated leaves, like those of the lentiscus, but are terminated by an odd lobe : the flower expands in the form of a rose, and the fruit resembles a grain of pepper.
Miller.
Moly, or wild garlick, is of several sorts ; as the great moly of Homer, the Indian moly, the moly of Hungary, ser-pent's moly, the yellow moly, Spanish purple moly, Spanish silver-capped moly, Diofcorides's moly, the sweet moly of Montpelier : the roots are tender, and must be carefully defended from flowers: as for the time of their flowering, the myth of Homer flows in May, and continues till July, and so do all the rest except the lark, which is late in September: they are hardy, and will thrive in any soil. Mortimer's Hb.

The forevern plant he drew.
And shew'd its nature, and its wondrous pow'r,
Black was the root, but milky white the flow'r;
Molly the name. Pepet's Odiſſy.
MOLASSES. n. f. [mellazzo, Italian.] Treacle; the spume of MOLA'SSES. } scum of the juice of the sugar-cane.
MOMME. n. f. A dull, stupid blockhead, a block; a poff: this owes its original to the French word moman, which fignifies the gaming at dice in malquerade, the custom and rule of which is, that a first fidence is to be observed; whatever sum one flakes another covers, but not a word is to be ſpoken; from hence alſo comes our word mum for flence. Hamer.
Mome, malthorſe, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!
Either get thee from the door, or fit down at the hatch. Shakeſpear's Comedy of Errors.
MOMENT. n. f. [moment, Fr. momentum, Latin.]
1. Conſequence; importance; weight; value.
We do not find that our Saviour reproved them of error, for thinking the judgment of the ſcribes to be worth the ob- jecting, for ſeeming it to be of any moment or value in mat- ters concerning God. Hosier, b. ii.
I have been here twenty times upon far poorer nement. Shakeſpear's Antony and Cleopatra.
What towns of any nement but we have? Shakeſpear.
It is an abſtrufe ſpeculation, but alſo of far leſs nement and conſequence to us than the others; ſeeing that without this we can evince the exiſtence of God. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Force; impulſive weight; actuating power.
The place of publick prayer is a circumſtance in the out- ward form, which hath nement to help devotion. Hosier.
Can theſe or ſuch be any aid to us?
Look they as they were built to flake the world?
Or be a moment to our enterprize? Benj. Jofeph.
Touch with lightſome moment of impulle
His free-will, to her own inclining left In even ſcale. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. x.
He is a capable judge; can hear both ſides with an indiſfer- ent ear; is determined only by the moments of truth, and fo retracts his paſt errors. Norris's Miſſal.
3. An indiviſible particle of time.
If I would go to help for an eternal moment, or fo, I could be knotted. Shakeſpear, Merry Wives of Windſor.
The mighty purſue new to the cockle,
Unleſs the deed go with it: from this moment
The very firtings of my heart ſhall be
The firtings of my hand. Shakeſpear, Macbeth.
The imaginary reaſoning of brutes is not a diſtinct reaſon- ing, but performed in a phyſical moment. Hale.
Yet thus receiving and returning blaſs
In this great moment, in this golden now,
When ev'ry trace of what, or when, or how,
Shou'd from my foul by raging love be torn. Prior.
MOMENTALLY. adv. [from momentum, Latin.] For a mo- ment.
Air but momentally remaining in our bodies, hath no pro- portionable ſpace for its conſervation, only of length enough to refrigerate the heart. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
MOMENTANEOUS. } adj. [momentaneus, Fr. momentaneus, Lat.]
MOMENTARY. } Laſting but a moment.
Small difficulties, when exceeding great good is ſure to en- ſue; and, on the other ſide, momentary benefits, when the hurt which they draw after them is unſpeakable, are not at all to be reſpected.
Flame above is durable and conſiſtent; but with uſ it is a momentary and momentary. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt. N<sup>o</sup>. 31.
MOMENTARILY. adv. [from moment.] Laſting for a moment; done in a moment.
Momentary as a found,
Swift as a ſhadow, thoſt as any dream. Shakeſpear.
Scarce could the ſturdy king
The horrid fum of his intentions tell,
But the, ſwift as the momentary wing
Of lightning, or the words he ſpoke, left hell. Crowham.
Swift as thought the fitting ſhade
Through air his momentary journey made. Dryden.
Onions, garlick, pepper, falt and vinegar, taken in green quantities, excite a momentary heat and fever. Arbuthnot.

MONK'S-RHUBARB. n. f. A species of dock: its roots are used in medicine. Auf.
MONOCHORD. n. f. [μόνος and χορδή.]
 1. An instrument of one string; as, the trumpet marine. Har.
 2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds: the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another; when the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if they were as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diatones; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths or diatessons; if the terms were as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce major; but if the terms were as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor; and, lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze: the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harri.
MONOCULAR. adj. [μόνος and oculus.] One-eyed; having only one eye.
 He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because the budded before others, might be an occasion of superstition, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Clarendon's Sup.

 He gives you an account of himself, and of his returning from the country, in monologue; to which unnatural way of narration Terence is subject in all his plays. Dryden.
MONOMACHY. n. f. [μονομαχία; μόνος and μάχη.] A duel; a single combat.
MONOME. n. f. [monome, Fr.] In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name; as, ab, aab, aab, aab, Harri.
MONOPETALOUS. adv. [monopetalos, Fr. μόνος and πέταλον.] It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into many small ones, and those fall off together. Quincy.
MONOPOLIST. n. f. [monopoleur, French.] One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.
TO MONOPOLIZE. v. a. [μονοποιέω and πωλέω; monopole, Fr.] To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.
 He has such a prodigious trade, that if there is not some stop put, he will monopolize; nobody will sell a yard of drapery, or mercery ware, but himself. Arbutnot.
MONOPOLY. n. f. [μονοπωλία; monopole, Fr. μόνος and πωλήω.] The exclusive privilege of selling any thing.
 Dost thou call me fool, boy?
 —All thy other titles hast thou given away; that thou wast born with.
 —Lords and great men will not let me; if I had a monopoly on't they would have part on't. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 One of the most oppressive monopolies imaginable; all others can concern only something without us, but this fastens upon our nature, yea upon our reason. Go. of the Tongue.
 Shakespeare rather writ happily than knowingly and justly; and Johnson, who by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, yet seemed to envy to posterity that knowledge, and to make a monopoly of his learning. Dryden's Two.
ΜΟΝΟΡΡΟΤΕ. n. f. [μόνος and ῥοτή.] Is a noun used only in some one oblique case. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

These, although not insensible how much our language was already over-stocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.
 Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pope.
MONOSYLLABLED. adj. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.
 Nine tailors, if rightly spell'd,
 Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleveland.
MONOTONY. n. f. [μονωτονία; μόνος and τόνος; monotonie, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.
 I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pope's Letters.
MONSIEUR. n. f. [French.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.
 A Frenchman his companion;
 An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
 A Gallian girl. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
MONSIEUR. n. f. [monsieur, monsieur, Fr.]
 The monsieurs and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress of full short of those bounds. Ray.
MONSTER. n. f. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Latin.]
 1. Something out of the common order of nature.
 It ought to be determined whether monsters be really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.
 2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.
 If the live long,
 And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
 Women will all turn monsters. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 All human virtue
 Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
 The great Alcides ev'ry labour pass'd,
 Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.
TO MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.
 Her offence
 Must be of such unnatural degree
 That monsters it. Shakespeare. King Lear.
 I had rather have one scratch my head 'till 'th sun,
 When the alarm were struck, than idly sit
 To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
MONSTROSITY. n. f. [from monstrous.] The state of being monstrous; or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.
 This is the monstrousness in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cressida.
 Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrousness. Bacon.
 We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrousness in education: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South's Sermons.
 By the same law monstrousness could not incapacitate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbutnot and Pope.
MONSTROUS. adj. [monstreux, Fr. monstruosus, Latin.]
 1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.
 Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.
 2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.
 Is it not monstrous that this player here
 But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
 Could force his soul to his own conceit,
 That, from her working, all his visage wan'd. Shakespeare. O. monstrosus but one halfpenny worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakespeare.
 3. Irregular; enormous.
 No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,
 The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.
 4. Shocking; hateful.
 This was an invention given out by the Spaniards, to save the monstrous scorn their nation received. Bacon.
MONSTROUS. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.
 Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top. Bacon.
 She was easily put off the books, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.
 Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
 And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden's Juv.

MONTR'ESS. n. f. An under gunner, or assistant to a gunner, engineer, or fire-master. DiD.
MONUMENT. n. f. [monumentum, Fr. monumentum, Latin.]
 1. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved; a memorial.
 In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jafus. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.
 So many grateful altars I would rear
 Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
 Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
 Or monument to ages: and thereon
 Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
 Of ancient British art
 A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
 Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands Arose. Philips.
 Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope to Swift.
 2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.
 On your family's old monument
 Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
 That appertain unto a burial. Shakespeare.
 The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
 Shall on his monument their odours throw. Sandy's Paraph.
 In a heap of slain,
 Two youthful knights they found beneath a load oppress'd

Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument. Dryd.
With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope's Mysel.
MONUMENTAL, adj. [from monument.] Memorial; preserving memory.
When the sun begins to fling
His flaming beams, me, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.
The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. ii.
The polished pillar different sculptures grace,
A work outlasting monumental brais. Pope.
2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.
Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion,
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakespeare.
I'll not fear that whiter skin of her than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakespeare. Othello.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be posselt
Of his monumental rest. Crowshaw.
MOOD, n. f. [made, Fr. modus, Latin.]
1. The form of an argument.
Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. their universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts's Logic.
Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mood and figure. Baker on Learning.
2. Stile of musick.
They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Dorian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
Their found seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton.
3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin, and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood. Clarke's Lat. Grammar.
4. [From mood, Gothic; mood, Saxon; mood, Dutch; and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.
The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide
With stony eyes. Fairy Queen, b. i.
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood,
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Fairy Qu.
Eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakespeare. Othello.
Clorinda changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vermil cheeks depaint. Fairfax.
Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Kneller.
She was in fittest mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras, p. ii.
These two kids t' appease his angry mood
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.
He now profuse of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addison.
5. Anger; rage; heat of mind. Mood, in Gothic, signifies habitual temper.
That which we move for our better instruction's sake, turn-eth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker, b. v.
MOODY, adj. [from mood.]
1. Angry; out of humour.
How now, moody?
What is't thou canst demand? Shakespeare. Tempest.
Chide him rev'rently,
When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth;
But being moody, give him line and scope,
'Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Confound themselves with working. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
Every peevish, moody malecontent
Shall let the senseless rabble in an uproar? Rowe.
2. Mental; intellectual: moo in Saxon signifies the mind.
Give me some musick; musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.
MOON, n. f. [moon, mena, Gothic; mena, Saxon; mona, Icelandic; manas, Danish; mane, German; maan, Dutch.]
1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cyn-this or Phoebe.
The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.
O wear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Left that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.

MOO

Diana hath her name from moisture, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is signified to be a goddess huntress. Poeticon.
Ye moon and stars bear witness to the truth! Dryden.
2. A month.
3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as, a half moon.
MOON-BEAM, n. f. [moon and beam.] Rays of lunar light,
The division and quaverings, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden on Dramatick Poets.
MOON-CALF, n. f. [moon and calf.]
1. A monster; a false conception: supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.
How cam'st thou to be the siege of this moon-calf? Shak.
2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.
The potion works not on the part design'd,
But turns his brain, and stupefies his mind;
The fotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden's Juvenal.
MOON-EYED, adj. [moon and eye.]
1. Having eyes affected by the revolutions of the moon.
Dim eyed; purblind. Anst.
MOONFERN, n. f. A plant. Anst.
MOON-FISH, n. f.
Moon-fish is so called, because the tail fin is shaped like a half moon, by which, and his odd trusted shape, he is sufficiently distinguished. Grew's Myology.
MOONLESS, adj. [from moon.] Not enlightened by the moon.
Afflicted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.
MOONLIGHT, n. f. [moon and light.] The light afforded by the moon.
Their bishop and his clergy, being departed from them by moonlight, to choose in his room any other bishop, had been altogether impossible. Hooker.
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love. Shakespeare.
MOONLIGHT, adj. Illuminated by the moon.
If you will patiently dance in our round,
And see our moonlight revels, go with us. Shakespeare.
Invites my steps, and points to yonder glade? Pope.
MOON-SEED, n. f. [moonspernum, Latin.]
The moon-seed hath a roscaceous flower, consisting of several small leaves, which are placed round the embryo in a circular order: the pointal, which is divided into three parts at the top, afterward becomes the fruit or berry, in which is included one flat seed, which is, when ripe, hollowed like the appearance of the moon. Miller.
MOONSHINE, n. f. [moon and shine.]
1. The lustre of the moon.
Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
Till candles, and starlight, and moonshine be out. Shakespeare.
I, by the moonshine, to the windows went:
And ere I was aware, sigh'd to myself. Dryd. Span. Fr.
2. [In burlesque.] A month.
I am some twelve or fourteen moonshines Lag of a brother. Shakespeare's King Lear.
MOONSHINE, adj. [moon and shine.] Illuminated by the moon:
MOONSHINY, adj. both seem a popular corruption of moonshining.
Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
You moonshine revellers, and shades of night. Shakespeare.
Althought it was a fair moonshine night, the enemy thought not fit to assault them. Clarendon, b. viii.
I went to see them in a moonshine night. Addison.
MOONSTONE, n. f. A kind of stone.
MOONSTRUCK, adj. [moon and struck.] Lunatick; affected by the moon.
Demoniack phrensy, mooping melancholy,
And moonstruck madnels. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
MOON-TREFOIL, n. f. [medicago, Latin.] A plant.
The moon-trefoil hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a plain orbiculated fruit, shaped like an half moon. Miller.
MOONWORT, n. f. [moon and wort.] Stationflower; honesty.
The flower of the moonwort consists of four leaves in form of a cross; the ovary which arises in the centre of the flower becomes a compressed perfectly-smooth fruit, divided into two cells, and filled with seeds. Miller.
MOONY, adj. [from moon.] Lunated; having a crescent for the standard resembling the moon.
Encount'ring fierce
The Solyman sultan, he o'erthrew
His moony troops, returning bravely fiesar'd. Philips.
With Panim blood.
The Soldan galls th' Illyrian coast;
But soon the miscreant moony host
Before the victor-cross shall fly. Fenton.
MOOR, n. f. [moor, Dutch; moeder, Teutonic, clay.]
1. A marsh; a fen; a bog; a tract of low and watry grounds.
While

MOP

While in her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor, it chanced that a London merchant passing by saw her, and liked her, begged her of her poor parents, and carried her to his home. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
In the great level near Thorney, several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor.
Let the marsh of Eltham Bruges tell,
What colour were their waters that same day,
And all the moor 'twixt Elverham and Dell. Fairy Qu.
2. [Maurus, Latin.] A negro; a black-a-moor.
I shall answer that better than you can the getting up of the negro's belly; the moor is with child by you. Shakespeare.
To Moor. v. a. [moor, French.] To fasten by anchors or otherwise.
Three more fierce Eurus in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd at hand. Dryden.
To Moor. v. n. To be fixed; to be stationed.
Aeneas gain'd Cajeta's bay:
At length on oozy ground his gallees moor,
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their stems to shore. Dryd.
My vessel, driv'n by a strong gulf of wind, Moored in a Chian creek. Addison's Ovid.
He visited the top of Taurus and the famous Ararat, where Noah's ark first moored. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
To Moor a Moor. [at the fall of a deer, corrupted from a moor, French.] To found the horn in triumph, and call in the whole company of hunters. Anst.
MOORCOCK, n. f. [moor and cock.] The male of the moorhen.
MOORHEN, n. f. [moor and hen.] A fowl that feeds in the fens, without web feet.
Water fowls, as sea-gulls and moorhens, when they flock and fly together from the sea towards the fiores, foreflew rain and wind. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 823.
MOORISH, n. f. [from moor.] Fenny; marshy; watry.
In the great level near Thorney, several oaks and firs have lain there till covered by the inundation of the fresh and salt waters, and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.
Along the moorish fens
Sighs the sad genius of the coming fens. Thompson.
MOORLAND, n. f. [moor and land.] Marsh; fen; watry ground.
In the fourth part of Staffordshire they go to the north for feed corn, and they of the north to the south, except in the moorlands. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Or like a bridge that joins a marsh
To moorlands of a different parish. Swift.
MOORSTONE, n. f. A species of granite.
The third stratum is of great rocks of moorstone and sandy earth. Woodward on Luffell.
MOORY, adj. [from moor.] Marshy; fenny; watry.
The dust the fields and pastures covers,
As when thick mists arise from moory vales. Fairfax.
In Essex, moory-land is thought the most proper. Mortimer.
MOOSE, n. f. The large American deer; the biggest of the species of deer.
To Moor. v. a. [from moor, moos, zemoos, meeting together,
Saxon, or perhaps, as it is a law term, from mois, French.]
To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.
MOOT CASE or POINT. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.
In this moot case your judgment to refuse,
Is present death. Dryden's Juvenal.
Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws? Locke on Education.
Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or you a master Strat. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
MOOTED, adj. Plucked up by the root. Anst.
MOOTER, n. f. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.
MOP, n. f. moppe, Welsh; mappa, Latin.]
1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.
Such is that sprinkling which some careless queen
Flirts on you from her mop, but not so clean.
You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
To rail; the singing still whirls on her mop. Swift.
2. [Perhaps corrupted from muck.] A wry mouth made in contempt.
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and mow. Shakespeare. Tempest.
To Mop. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.
To Mop. v. n. [from muck.] To make wry mouths in contempt.
Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obidicut; Hobbididen, prince of dumbbells; Mahu, of stealing; Mohu, of murder; and Filibertiggibbet, of mapping and moving, who since possesses chamber-maids. Shakespeare.
An ass fell a mopping and baying at a lion. L'Estrange.
To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant daydream; to be spiritless, unactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious. Shakespeare.

What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers. Shakespeare.
Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
Ears without hands or eyes, smelling fans all,
Or but a sickly part of one true sense
Could not so mope. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
And were brought moping hither. Shakespeare. Tempest.
Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
Demoniack phrensy, moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madnels. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind,
Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
With meagre discontented looks they sit,
And watch the waffling of the midnight taper. Rowe.
To MOPE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.
They say there are charms in herbs, said he, and so threw a handful of grafs; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.
Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke on Education.
MOR, n. f. [mope, Fr. mor, Latin.]
1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal; good or bad.
Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker, b. ii.
Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral. Hooker, b. iii.
In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide man's life, but in supernatural it alone guideth.
Hooker, b. i.
Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,
Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
No rights of hospitality remain,
The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain. Dryden.
2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.
France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
With plumed helm thy flag'st begins his threats,
Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and criest. Shakespeare.
2. Popular; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.
We have found it, with a moral certainty, the feat of the Mosaic abyss. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson's Sermons.
A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts's Logic.
MORAL, n. f.
1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life: this is rather a French than English sense.
Their moral and economy,
Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.
2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.
Get you some distill'd carduus benedictus, and lay it to your heart; it is the only thing for a qualm.
—Benedictus? why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.
—Moral! No, by my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakespeare. Much ado about nothing.
Left behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.
The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the ground-work of his instruction; this being formed, he con-strives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's DuRasney.
I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me. Swift to Gay.
To MORAL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To moralise, to make moral reflections.
When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shakespeare.
MORALIST.

MON

MORALIST. n. f. [moraliste, French.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. f. [moralité, Fr. from moral.] Addison.

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethics.

The system of moralité, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift's Miscel.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in moralité, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature. Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The moralité of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South's Sermons.

To MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, French.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He 'as left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

—I pray thee moralize them. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

Did he not moralize this spectacle? Shakespeare.

—O yes, into a thousand families. L'Estrange.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb. L'Estrange.

2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize my song. Fairy Queen, b. i.

3. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,

And with his prince's arms he moraliz'd his song. Prior.

To MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. f. [moralizer, Fr.] He who moralizes.

MORALLY. adv. [moral, Fr.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South's Sermons.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally. Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false. Atterbury's Sermons.

MORALS. n. f. [moralis, Latin.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their moralis as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South's Sermons.

Learn then what moralis critics ought to show:

'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join;

In all you speak, let truth and candor shine. Pope.

MORALS. n. f. [moralis, French.] Fen; bog; moor.

Landchapes point out the fairest and most fruitful spots, as well as the rocks, and wildernesses, and moralis of the country. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Nor the deep moralis

Refuse, but through the shaking wilderness

Pick your nice way. Thomson's Autumn, l. 480.

MORBID. n. f. [morbidus, Latin.] Diseased; in a state contrary to health.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are there diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbutnot.

MORBIDNESS. n. f. [morbidity, Latin.] State of being diseased.

MORBIFICAL. n. f. [morbificus, Latin, Lat. morbificus, Fr.]

MORBIFICK. v. Causing diseases.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbifick conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard; wherefore initiate consumptives must change their air. Harvey on Consumptions.

This disease is cured by the critical resolution, concoction, and evacuation of the morbifick matter. Arbutnot.

MOROSE. n. f. [morofus, Latin.] Proceeding from disease; not healthy.

Malphighi, under galls, comprehends all preternatural and morbifick tumours and excrecencies of plants. Ray on Creation.

MOROSITY. n. f. [morosity, Lat.] Diseased state. A word not in use.

The inference is fair, from the organ to the action, that they have eyes, therefore some sight was designed, if we except the casual impediments or morbifities in individuals. Brown.

MON

MORDACIOUS. adj. mordax, Latin.] Biting; apt to bite.

MORDACITY. n. f. [mordacitas, mordacité, Fr. from mordax, Latin.] Biting quality.

It is to be inquired, whether there be any menstruum to dissolve any metal that is not fretting or corroding, and openeth the body by sympathy, and not by mordacity, or violent penetration.

Bacon's Physical Remains.

MORDICANT. n. f. [mordax, Lat. mordicant, Fr.] Biting; acrid.

He presumes, that the mordicant quality of bodies must proceed from a fiery ingredient; whereas the light and inflammable parts must be driven away by that time the fire has reduced the body to ashes. Boyle.

MORDICATION. n. f. [mordicant, Fr.] The act of corroding or biting.

Another cause is mordication of the orifices, especially of the mesenteric veins; as any thing that is sharp and biting doth provoke the part to expel, and mustard provoketh freezing.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N.º 37.

MORE. adj. [mare, Saxon, the comparative of some or great.]

1. In greater number; in greater quantity; in greater degree.

Wrong not that wrong with more contempt. Shaksp.

Their riches were more than that they might dwell together. Gen. xxxvi. 7.

I mortally dislike a damning face.

Granville.

Mo'rtar. n. f. [mortarium, Lat. mortier, Fr.]

1. A strong vessel in which materials are broken by being pounded with a pestle.

Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war.

Bacon's holy War.

The action of the diaphragm and muscles serves for the communion of the meat in the stomach by their constant agitation upwards and downwards, resembling the pounding of materials in a mortar.

Key on Creation.

2. A short wide cannon out of which bombs are thrown.

Those arms which for nine centuries had brav'd
The wrath of time on antique stone engrav'd,
Now torn by mortars stand yet undefac'd.

Granville.

On nobler trophies by thy valour rais'd.
Mo'rtar. n. f. [morter, Dutch; mortier, French.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick.

Wolius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is wash'd in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him.

Shakefp. King Lear.

They had brick for stone, and slime for mortar.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other.

Mortimer.

Mo'rtgage. n. f. [mort and gage, French.]

1. A dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

Th' estate runs out, and mortgages are made,
Their fortune ruin'd, and their fame betray'd.

Dryden.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages.

Arbutnot.

The broker,
Bent on some mortgage, to avoid reproach,
He seeks bye-streets, and faves th' expensive coach.

Gay.

2. The state of being pledged.

The land is given in mortgage only, with full intention to be redeemed within one year.

Bacon's Office of Alienation.

To Mo'rtgage. v. a. [from the noun.] To pledge; to put to pledge; to make over to a creditor as a security.

Addison's Guard. N. 113.

Let men contrive how they disentangle their mortgag'd souls.

Decay of Pity.

They make the widows mortgag'd ox their prey.

Saunders.

Their not abating of their expensive way of living, has forced them to mortgage their best manors.

Arbutnot.

MORTGAGE. n. f.

Mo'rtgager. n. f. [from mortgage.] He that gives a mortgage.

MORTIFEROUS. adj. [mortifer, Latin.] Fatal; deadly; destructive.

What is it but a continued perpetuated voice from heaven, to give men no rest in their sins, no quiet from Christ's im-portunity, till they awake from the lethargick sleep, and arise from so dead, so mortiferous a state, and permit him to give them life.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

These murmuring, like a mortiferous herb, are poisonous even in their first spring.

Government of the Tongue, f. 10.

MORTIFICATION. n. f. [mortification, Fr. from mortifi.]

1. The state of corrupting, or losing the vital qualities; gangrene.

It appeareth in the gangrene, or mortification of flesh, either by opiates, or intense colds.

Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 333.

Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene,
To black mortification.

2. Destruction of active qualities.

Inquire what gives impediment to union or restitution, which is called mortification; as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine.

Bacon's Physical Remains.

3. The act of subduing the body by hardships and macerations.

A diet of some fish is more rich and alkalescent than that of flesh, and therefore very improper for such as practise mortification.

Arbutnot or Aliments.

4. Humiliation; subjection of the passions.

The mortification of our lusts has something in it that is troublesome, yet nothing that is unreasonable.

Tillotson.

5. Vexation; trouble.

It is one of the most vexatious mortifications of a studious man, to have his thoughts disordered by a tedious visit.

L'Estrange.

We had the mortification to lose the sight of Munich, Augstburg, and Ratibon.

Addison on Italy.

To Mo'rtify. v. a. [mortifier, French.]

1. To destroy vital qualities.

To destroy active powers, or essential qualities.

What gives impediment to union or restitution is called mortification, as when quicksilver is mortified with turpentine or pittle.

His pupil might be tir'd with lectures,
Which help'd to mortify his pride.

Swift.

4. To macerate or harass the body to compliance with the mind.

We mortify ourselves with fish, and think we fare coarsely if we abstain from flesh.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Mortify'd he was to that degree,
A poorer than himself he would not see.

Dryden.

5. To humble; to depress; to vex.

Let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans.

Shakespeare.

He is controuled by a nod, mortified by a frown, and transport by a smile.

Addison's Guard. N. 113.

How often is the ambitious man mortified with the very praises he receives, if they do not rise so high as he thinks they ought.

Addison's Spect. N. 256.

To Mo'rtify. v. n.

1. To gangrene; to corrupt.

1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept, motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.
All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.
Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better fort'd as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.
Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or putrefaction; for all putrefactions, if it dissolve not in oxidation, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The malt made in Summer is apt to contract mould. Mort.
A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.
2. [Mole, Saxon.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.
Those moulds that are of a bright chestnut or hazelly colour are accounted the best; next to that, the dark grey and russet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy

- heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but gobs, furz, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous nor too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just consistence between sand and clay. Miller.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sandys's Paraph.
The black earth, every-where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.
3. Matter of which any thing is made.
When the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man. Dryden.
Nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my weak sex. Addison's Cato.
[Mould, Spanish; moulle, French.] The matrix in which any thing is cast; in which any thing receives its form.
If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared,
it may be easily perceived they had all one original mould.
A dangerous precedent were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker, b. v.
French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.
My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
But with the end of use. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
You may have fruit in more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 502.
The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought Fusile, or grav'd in metal. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.
We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.
Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.
Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.
4. Cast; form.
No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shakespeare.
William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould, and making, and of another fame, being the most universally belov'd of any man of that age; and, having a great office in the court, he made the court itself better esteem'd, and more revered in the country. Clarendon.
Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endur'd, and what their pow'r,
And where their weakness. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould. Waller.
From their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryd.
Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
Married a lass of London mould. Prior.
5. The future or contexture of the skull.
To Mould. v. a. [from the noun.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould.
In woods, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
And will be found with peril and with pain;
Ne can the man that moulds in idle cell
Unto her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.
To Mould. v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.
Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
To Mould. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To form; to shape; to model.
I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Here is the cap you worship did bespeak;
Why this was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd. Shakespeare.
The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a matter-piece, and to mould him plato-nically to his own idea. Hutton's Buckingham.
Did I request thee, Maker! for my clay
To mould me man? Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Hale.

MOU

- By the force of education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain.
Atterbury's Sermons.
Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and vena a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold. Dunciad, b. iv.
A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.
For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to complete it ev'ry way,
He moulded it with female clay. Swift's Miscel.
Fabellus would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æliop. Watts's Improvement of the Mind, p. i.
2. To knead: as, to mould bread. Ains.
MOULDABLE. adj. [from mould.] What may be moulded.
The differences of figurable and not figurable, mouldable and not mouldable, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
MOULDER. v. n. [from mould.] He who moulds.
To MOULDER. v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished.
If he had fat fill, the enemies army would have moulder'd to nothing, and been expoid to any advantage he would take. Clarendon, b. viii.
Whatsoever moulders, or is washed away, is carried down into the lower grounds, and nothing ever brought back again.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those formed stones deposed of their shells, and expoid upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. v.
To them by smiling Jove 'twas giv'n,
Great William's glories to recall,
When statues moulder, and when arches fall. Prior.
Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolv'd to give his parish a little Latin in his turn. Addison's Spect. No. 221.
To MOULDER. v. a. [from mould.] To turn to dust; to crumble.
The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been moulder'd with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.
With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some, hostile fury. Pope.
MOULDINESS. n. f. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.
Flesh, fish, and plants, after a mouldiness, rottenness, or corrupting, will fall to breed worms. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
MOULDING. n. f. [from mould.] Ornamental cavities in wood or stone.
Hollow mouldings are required in the work. Moxon.
MOULDWARP. n. f. [mole and peoppan, Saxon.] A mole;
a small animal that throws up the earth.
Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect through cowardly distrust
Of his own wings, dare not to heaven flee,
But like a mouldwarp in the earth doth lie. Spenser.
While they play the mouldwarps, unfavoury damps distemper their heads with annoyance only for the present. Carew.
With gins we betray the vermin of the earth, namely, the schat and the mouldwarp. Walton's Angler.
MOULDY. adj. [from mould.] Overgrown with concretions.
Is thy name mouldy?
—Yea.
—'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.
—Ha, ha, ha; most excellent: things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John.
The marble looks white and fresh, as being expoid to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserves itself from that mouldy colour which others contract.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
To MOULT. v. n. [muyten, Dutch.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.
Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breasts, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.
Time shall mould away his wings,
E'er he shall discover
In the wide whole world again
Such a constant lover. Suckling.
The widow'd turtle hangs her moulting wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings. Garth.
To MOUNCH. v. a. [mouch, to eat much. Ains.] This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the ob-tunded action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean.
A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And munched, and munched, and munched. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
MOUND.

MOU

MOUND. n. f. [munbian, Saxon, to defend.] Any thing raised to fortify or defend: usually a bank of earth and stone. His broad branches laden with rich fee, Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound
Of this great garden, compass'd with a mound, Fairy Sq.
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The mounds into salt tears. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

God had thrown
That mountain as his garden mound, high rais'd. Milton.
Such as broke through all mounds of law, such as laughed at the sword of vengeance which divine justice brandished in their faces. South's Sermons.

Nor cold shall hinder me with horns and hounds
To thrice the thickets, or to leap the mounds. Dryden.
The state of Milan is like a vast garden surrounded by a noble mound-work of rocks and mountains. Addison.

TO MOUND. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify with a mound.

MOUNT. n. f. [mont, French; mons, Latin.]

1. A mountain; a hill.
Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount. Gen. xxxi. 54.

Behold yon mountain's hoary heights,
Made higher with new mounds of snow. Dryden.

2. An artificial hill raised in a garden, or other place.
He might see what mounds they had in short time cast, and what a number there was of brave and warlike soldiers.

Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.
3. A publick treasure; a bank. Now obsolete.

These examples confirmed me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounds of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.

TO MOUNT. v. n. [monter, French.]

1. To rise on high.
Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job iii. 27.

I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap;
Left teachen slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory. Shakspere.

A base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shakspere.

The fire of trees and houles mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley.

If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun; not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them, they are of necessity to fall. Dryd.

2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Job xx. 6.

3. To get on horseback.

He
Like a full acorn'd boar, a churning on,
Cry'd, oh! and mounted. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

4. [For amount.] To rise in value.
Bring then these blessings to a strict account,
Make fair deductions, see to what they mount. Pope.

TO MOUNT. v. a.

1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.
The fire that mounts the liquor till 't runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, waistes it. Shakspere.

What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me free, and cannot feed mine eye? Shaksp.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ral.

2. To ascend; to climb.
Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms, once our own? Dryden.

3. To place on horseback.
Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Of these he choie the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden's En.

Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end; fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grew's Cos. b. ii.

4. To embellish with ornaments.

5. TO MOUNT guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.

6. TO MOUNT a cannon. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.

MO'UNTAIN. v. f. [montaigne, French.] A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.

I had been drowned; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what a thing should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy.

Shakspere's Merry Wives of Windsor.

She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where fits deformity to mock my body. Shakspere.

MOU

From Acmon's hands a rolling-stone there came,
So large, it half deserv'd a mountain's name! Dryden.

MO'UNTAIN. adj. [montanus, Latin.] Found on the mountains; pertaining to the mountains; growing on the mountains.

Now for our mountain sport, up to yond hill,
Your legs are young. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shaksp.

MOUNTAIN'EER. n. f. [from mountain.]

1. An inhabitant of the mountains.
A few mountaineers may escape, enough to continue human race; and yet illiterate rusticks, as mountaineers always are.

Bentley's Sermons.

Amiteirian troops, of mighty fame,
And mountaineers, that from Severus came. Dryden's En.

2. A savage; a fierce booter; a rustick.
Yield, rustick mountaineer. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

No savage, fierce banditti, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity. Milton.

MO'UNTAINET. n. f. [from mountain.] A hillock; a small mount. Elegant, but not in use.

Her breasts sweetly rose up like two fair mountaints in the pleasant vale of Tempe. Sidney.

MOUNTAINOUS. adj. [from mountain.]

1. Hilly; full of mountains.
The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky.
What custom wills in all things, should we do't,
Mountainous error would be too highly heapt
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakspere.

On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies,
Mountainous heaps of wonders rise,
Whole tow'ring strength will ne'er submit
To reason's batteries, or the mines of wit. Prior.

3. Inhabiting mountains.
In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past. Bacon's Essays.

MO'UNTAINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mountainous.] State of being full of mountains.

Armenia is so called from the mountainousness of it.

MO'UNTAIN-PARSLEY. n. f. [oreoselinum, Lat.] A plant.

The mountain-parshly hath a rose-shaped umbellated flower, consisting of several leaves, placed in a circular order, resting on the empalement, which afterwards becomes a fruit composed of two seeds, which are oval, plain, large, streaked and bordered, and sometimes cast off their cover; the leaves are like parsley. Miller.

MO'UNTAIN-ROSE. n. f. [chamaerhodolendron, Lat.] A plant.

The mountain-rose hath a tubulous flower, consisting of one leaf, shaped somewhat like a funnel; from whose cup arises the pointal, fixed like a nail in the hinder part of the flower, which afterwards becomes an oblong fruit, divided into five cells, in which are contained many very small seeds. Miller.

MO'UNTANT. adj. [montans, Lat.] Rising on high.

Hold up, you fluts,
Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable,
Although, I know, you'll swear. Shak. Timon of Athens.

MO'UNTEBANK. n. f. [montare in banco, Italian.]

1. A doctor that mounts a bench in the market, and boasts his infallible remedies and cures.

I bought an unction of a mountebank
So mortal, that but dip a knife in it,
Where it draws blood, no cataplasm so rare,
Can save the thing from death. Shaksp. Hamlet.

She, like a mountebank, did wound
And stab herself with doubts profound,
Only to shew with how small pain
The forces of faith are cur'd again. Hudibras, p. i.

But Æschylus, says Horace in some page,
Was the first mountebank that trod the stage. Dryden.

It looks so like a mountebank to boast of infallible cures.

Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. Any boastful and false pretender.
As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakspere.

There are mountebanks, and snatterers in state. L'Estrange.

Nothing so impossible in nature but mountebanks will undertake. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

TO MO'UNTEBANK. v. a. [from the noun.] To cheat by false boasts or pretences.

I'll mountebank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

MO'UNTENANCE. n. f. Amount of a thing. Mo'UNTER.

5

MOU

MO'UNTER. n. f. [from mount.] One that mounts.

Though they to the earth were thrown,
Yet quickly they regain'd their own;
Such nimbleness was never shewn;
They were two gallant mounters. Drayton's Nymphid.

Few bankers will to heav'n be mounters. Swift.

MO'UNTY. n. f. [montée, French.] The rise of a hawk.

The sport which Basilus would shew to Zemane, was the mounty at a heron, which getting up on his wagging wings with pain, as though the air next to the earth were not fit to fly through, now diminished the fight of himself. Sidney.

TO MOURN. v. n. [murnan, Saxon.]

1. To grieve; to be sorrowful.
Abraham came to mourn for Sarah, and to weep. Genes.

I mourn in my complaint. Psal. lv. 2.

This day is holy; mourn not, nor weep. Neh. viii. 9.

The people shall mourn over it. Hos. x. 5.

My vineyard being desolate, mourneth unto me. Jer. xii.

They made an appointment to mourn with him, and to comfort him. Job ii. 11.

They rejoice at the presence of the sun, and mourn at the absence thereof. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N° 493.

2. To wear the habit of sorrow.
We mourn in black; why mourn we not in blood? Shak.

Friends in false weeds appear,
Grieve for an hour, perhaps they mourn a year;
They bear about the mockery of woe
To midnight dances, and the puppet-show. Pope.

3. To preserve appearance of grief.
The days of mourning for my father are at hand, then will I lay Jacob. Gen. xxvii. 41.

Feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on mourning apparel. 2 Sam. xiv. 2.

Publish it that he is dead;
Maintain a mourning ostentation,
Hang mournful epitaphs. Shaksp. Much about nothing.

TO MOURN. v. a.

1. To grieve for; to lament.
The muse that mourns him now his happy triumph sung,
Dryden.

Portius himself oft falls in tears before me,
As if he mourn'd his rival's ill success. Addison's Cato.

2. To utter in a sorrowful manner.
The love-lorn nightingale
Nightly to thee her sad long mourneth well. Milton.

MOURNE. n. f. [morne, French.] The round end of a staff;
the part of a lance to which the steel part is fixed, or where it is taken off.

He carried his lances, which though strong to give a lancely blow indeed, yet to were they coloured with hooks near the mourns, that they prettily represented sheep hooks. Sidney.

MO'URNER. n. f. [from mourn.]

1. One that mourns; one that grieves.
The kindred of the queen must die at Pomfret.

— Indeed I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been fill my adversaries. Shakspere.

To cure thy woe, she shews thy fame;
Left the great mourner should forget
That all the race whence Orange came,
Made virtue triumph over fate. Prior.

2. One who follows a funeral in black.
A woman that had two daughters buried one, and mourners were provided to attend the funeral. L'Estrange's Fables.

He lives to be chief mourner for his son;
Before his face his wife and brother burns. Dryden.

3. Something used at funerals.
The mourner eugh and builder oak were there. Dryden.

MO'URNFUL. adj. [mourn and full.]

1. Having the appearance of sorrow.
No funeral rites, nor man in mournful weeds,
Nor mournful bell shall ring her burial. Shakspere.

The winds within the quiv'ring branches play'd,
And dancing trees a mournful music made. Dryden.

2. Causing sorrow.
Upon his tomb
Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans;
The treach'rous manner of his mournful death. Shaksp.

3. Sorrowful; feeling sorrow.
The mournful fair,
Oft as the rolling years return,
With fragrant wreaths and flowing hair,
Shall visit her diffingh'd urn. Prior.

4. Betokening sorrow; expressive of grief.
No mournful bell shall ring her burial.
On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs. Shakspere.

MO'URNFULLY. adv. [from mournful.] Sorrowfully; with sorrow.

Beat the drum, that it speak mournfully. Shakspere.

1. Sorrow; grief.

2. Show of grief; appearance of sorrow.

MOU

MO'URNING. n. f. [from mourn.]

1. Lamentation; sorrow.
Wo is me, who will deliver me in those days? the beginning of sorrows and great mournings. 2 Esdr. xvi. 18.

2. The dress of sorrow.
They through the maffter-freet the corps convey'd,
The houles to their tops with black were spread,
And ev'n the pavements were with mourning hid. Dryden.

MO'URNINGLY. adv. [from mourning.] With the appearance of forrowing.

The king spoke of him admiringly and mourningly. Shak.

MOUSE. plural mice. n. f. [mur, Saxon; mus, Latin.] The smallest of all beasts; a little animal haunting houles and corn fields, destroyed by cats.

The eagle England being in prey.
To her unguarded nest the weazel Scot
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat. Shakspere.

These shall be unclean; the weasle, the mouse, and the tortoise. Lev. xi. 29.

Where mice and rats devour'd poetick bread,
And with heroic verse luxuriously were fed. Dryden.

This structure of hair I have observed in the hair of cats, rats, and mice. Darham's Physico-Theol.

TO MOUSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To catch mice.
An eagle tow'ring, in his pride of place
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd and kill'd. Shakspere.

2. I suppose it means, in the following passage, fly; infidious; or predatory, rapacious; interested.

A whole assembly of mousing saints, under the mask of zeal and good nature, lay many kingdoms in blood. L'Estrange.

MO'USE-EAR. n. f. [mysotis, Lat.]

The mouse-ear hath the whole appearance of chick-weed;
but the flower is larger, and the fruit shaped like an ox's horn, gaping at the top, and full of small round seeds. Miller.

MO'USEHUNT. n. f. [mouse and hunt.] Moufer; one that hunts mice.

You have been a mouse-hunt in your time,
But I will watch you. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

MO'USE-HOLE. n. f. [mouse and hole.] Small hole; hole at which a mouse only may run in.

He puts the prophets in a mouse hole: the last man ever speaks the best reason. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

He can creep in at a mouse-hole, but he soon grows too big ever to get out again. Stillingfleet.

MO'USER. n. f. [from mouse.] One that catches mice.

Puss, a madam, will be a mouser still. L'Estrange.

When you have fowl in the larder, leave the door open, in pity to the cat, if she be a good mouser. Swift.

MO'USETAIL. n. f. An herb.

MO'USE-TRAP. n. f. [mouse and trap.] A snare or gin in which mice are taken.

Many analogal motions in animals, I have reason to con-

Streams will run muddy where the spring's impure. Rosam.
Till by the fury of the storm full blown,
The muddy bottom o'er the clouds is thrown. Dryden.
Out of the true fountains of science painters and statuary are bound to draw, without amusing themselves with dipping in streams which are often muddy, at least troubled; I mean the manner of their masters after whom they creep. Dryden.

2. Impure; dark; gross.
There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young ey'd cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal sounds;
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

If you chuse, for the composition of such ointment, such ingredients as do make the spirits a little more gross or muddy, thereby the imagination will fix the better. Bacon.
2. A bird so called. Ans.
3. Soiled with mud.

His passengers
Expos'd in muddy weeds, upon the miry shore. Dryden.
4. Dark; not bright.

The black
A more inferior station seeks,
Leaving the fiery red behind,
And mingles in her muddy checks. Swift's Miscel.

5. Cloudy; dull.
Do't think I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation. Shak. Winter's Tale.
Yet I,
A dull and muddy mettel rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
To MUDY. v. a. [from mud.] To make muddy; to cloud; to disturb.

The people muddled
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground; or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal; muddies the best wit, and makes it only to flutter and froth high. Grew's Cosmol. b. iii.

MUDUCKER. n. f. [mud and fuck.] A fee fowl.
In all water-fowl, their legs and feet correspond to that way of life; and in muduckers, two of the toes are somewhat joined, that they may not easily sink. Derham.

MUDWALL. n. f. [mud and wall.]
1. A wall built without mortar, by throwing up mud and suffering it to dry.
If conscience contract rust or soil, a man may as well expect to see his face in a mudwall, as that such a conscience should give him a true report of his condition. South's Sermon.

2. A bird so called. Ans.
MUDWALLED. adj. [mud and wall.] Having a mudwall.
As folks from mudwall'd tenement
Bring landlords pepper-corn for rent;
Present a turkey, or a hen. Prior.

To MUD. v. a. [muer, Fr.] To moult; to change feathers.
MUFF. n. f. [muff, Swedish.] A soft cover for the hands in Winter.
Feel but the difference soft and rough,
This a gantlet, that a muff. Cleveland.

What! no more favours, not a ribbon more,
Not fan, not muff. Suckling.
The lady of the spotted muff began. Dryden.
A child that stands in the dark upon his mother's muff, says he stands upon something, he knows not what. Lect.

To MUFFLE. v. a. [from muffle, French, a winter glove.]
1. To cover from the weather.
His muffled feature speaks him a recluse,
His ruins prove him a religious house. Cleveland.
You must be muffled up like ladies. Dryden.
The face lies muffled up within the garment. Addiſon.

2. To blindfold.
Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shakeſp. Winter.

MUL

We've caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled. Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.
Our understandings lie grovelling in this lower region, muffled up in mists and darkness. Glauville's Seep.
Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death: when the malefactor comes once to be muffled, and the fatal cloth drawn over his eyes, we know that he is not far from his execution. South's Sermons.

Bright Lucifer
That night his heavenly form obscur'd with tears;
And since he was forbid to leave the skies,
He muffled with a cloud his mournful eyes. Dryden.
One muffled up in the infallibility of his sect, will not enter into debate with a person that will question any of those things which to him are sacred. Lacke.

3. To conceal; to involve.
This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was: although the king's manner of shewing things by pieces, and by dark lights, hath so muffled it, that it hath left it almost as a mystery. Bacon's Henry VII.

No muffled clouds, nor shades infernal, can
From his inquiry hide offending man. Sandy's Paraph.
The thoughts of kings are like religious groves,
The walks of muffled gods. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

They were in former ages muffled up in darkness and superstition. Arbutnot's Hiſt. of John Bull.
To MUFFLE. v. n. [muffelen, Dutch.] To speak inwardly; to speak without clear and distinct articulation.
The freedom of aptness and vigour of pronouncing, as in the Bocca Romana, and giving somewhat more of aspiration; and the closeness and muffling, and laziness of speaking, render the sound of speech different. Holder.

MUFFLER. n. f. [from muffle.]
1. A cover for the face.
Fortune is painted with a muffler before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is blind. Shakeſp. Henry V.
Mr. Hales has found out the best expedients for preventing immediate suffocation from tainted air, by breathing through mufflers which imbibe these vapours. Arbutnot on Air.

2. A part of a woman's dress by which the face was covered.
There is no woman's gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler, and a handkerchief, and so escape. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The Lord will take away your tinkling ornaments, chains, bracelets, and mufflers. Iſa. iii. 19.

MUFFT. n. f. [a Turkish word.] The high priest of the Mahometans.

MULCT. n. f. [mulcta, Latin.] A fine; a penalty: used commonly of pecuniary penalty.
Because this is a great part, and Eusebius hath yet said nothing, we will, by way of mulct or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon's holy War.

Look humble upward, see his will disclose
The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
Had not eternal wisdom found the way. Dryden.

To MULCT. v. a. [mulcto, Lat. mulctus, Fr.] To punish with fine or forfeiture.
Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulct it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

MULE. n. f. [mule, mulet, Fr. mula, Latin.] An animal generated between a he ass and a mare, or sometimes between a horse and a she ass.
You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
Producing mules of greater speed and force. Sandy.
Those effluvia in the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation, as is demonstrable in a mule, which doth more resemble the parent, that is, the ass, than the female. Ray.

Twelve young mules, a strong laborious race. Pope.
MULETEER. n. f. [muletier, Fr. mulis, Lat.] Mule-driver; horse-boy.
Base muletiers,
Like peasant foot-boys, do they keep the walls,
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Your ships are not well mann'd,
Your mariners are muletiers, reapers. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

Your fathers Didstain'd the mummery of foreign flollers.

MUMMY. n. f. [munie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmafius from anomon, by Bochart from the Arabic.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two different substances preferred for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps: this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials well stopp'd, or suffered to dry and harden in the air: the first kind is brought to us in large pieces, of a lax and friable texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second sort, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that as all kinds of mummy are brought from Egypt we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of executed criminals, or of any other bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhaled, and the embalming matter has penetrated so thoroughly that the flesh will keep.

MUN

Mummy has been esteemed resolvent and balsamick; and besides it, the skull, and even the most growing on the skulls of human skeletons, have been celebrated for antiepileptic virtues; the fat also of the human body has been recommended in rheumatisms, and every other part or humour have been in repute for the cure of some disease: at present we are wise enough to know, that the virtues ascribed to the parts of the human body are all either imaginary, or such as may be found in other animal substances: the mummy and the skull alone of all these horrid medicines retain their places in the shops.

The silk Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Conserv'd of maidens hearts.

It is strange how long carcases have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years.

Say'd by spice, like mummies, many a year, Old bodies of philosophy appear.

2. Mummy is used among gardeners for a sort of wax used in the planting and grafting of trees.

3. To beat to a MUMMY. To beat foundly.

To MUMP. v. a. [munipelen, Dutch.]

1. To nibble; to bite quick; to chew with a continued motion.

MUMPS. n. f. The squinancy.

To MUNCH. v. a. [manger, French.] To chew by great mouthfuls.

Say, sweet love, what thou desir'st to eat? —Truly, a peck of provender; I could munch you good dry oats.

MUNCH. v. n. To chew eagerly by great mouthfuls.

It is the son of a mare that's broken loose, and munching upon the melons.

MUNCHER. n. f. [from munch.] One that munches.

MUND. n. f.

Mund is peace, from which our lawyers call a breach of the peace, mundbrech: to Edmund is happy peace; Ethelmund, noble peace; Ælmond, all peace; with which these are much of the same import: Ireneus, Helychius, Lenis, Pacatus, Sedatus, Tranquillus, &c.

MUNDANE. adj. [mundanus, Latin.] Belonging to the world.

The platonical hypothesis of a mundane soul will relieve us.

The atoms which now constitute heaven and earth, being once separate in the mundane space, could never without God, by their mechanical affections, have convened into this present frame of things.

MUNDATION. n. f. [mundus, Latin.] The act of cleansing.

MUNDATORY. adj. [from mundus, Latin.] Having the power to cleanse.

MUNDICK. n. f. A kind of marcasite or semimetal found in tin mines.

When any metals were in considerable quantity, these bodies lose the name of marcasites, and are called ores: in Cornwall and the West they call them mundick.

Besides stones, all the sorts of mundick are naturally figured.

MUNDIFICATION. n. f. [mundus and facio, Latin.] Cleansing any body, as from dross, or matter of inferior account to what is to be cleansed.

MUNDIFICATIVE. adj. [mundus and facio, Latin.] Cleansing; having the power to cleanse.

Gall is very mundificative, and was a proper medicine to clear the eyes of Tobit.

We incarnated with an addition to the fore-mentioned mundification.

To MUNDIFY. v. a. [mundus and facio, Latin.] To cleanse; to make clean.

Simple wounds, such as are mundified and kept clean, do not need any other hand but that of nature.

The ingredients aduate the spirits, absorb the intestinal superfluities, reclude opilation, and mundify the blood.

And threw the tops all in the sexton's face. Shakeſp.
MUSCLE. n. f. [muscle, Fr. musculus, Lat. muscula, Sax.]
Muscle is a bundle of thin and parallel plates of fleshy threads or fibres, inclosed by one common membrane: all the fibres of the same plate are parallel to one another, and tied together at extremely little distances by short and transverse fibres: the fleshy fibres are composed of other smaller fibres, inclosed likewise by a common membrane: each lesser fibre consists of very small vessels or bladders, into which we suppose the veins, arteries and nerves to open, for every muscle receives branches of all those vessels, which must be distributed to every fibre: the two ends of each muscle or the extremities of the fibres are, in the limbs of animals, fastened to two bones, the one moveable, the other fixed; and therefore, when the muscles contract, they draw the moveable bone according to the direction of their fibres. Quincy.
The instruments of motion are the muscles, the fibres whereof, contracting themselves, move the several parts of the body. Locke.
2. A bivalve shell-fish.
Of shell-fish, there are wrinkles, limpers, cockles and muscles. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
It is the observation of Aristotle, that oysters and muscles grow fuller in the waxing of the moon. Hakewill.
Two pair of small muscle shells was found in a limestone quarry. Woodward on Pessils.
MUSCOSITY. n. f. [muscosus, Lat.] Moistness.
MUSCULAR. adj. [from musculus, Latin.] Performed by muscles.
By the muscular motion and perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of the liquids are thrown out of the body. Art.
MUSCULARITY. n. f. [from muscular.] The state of having muscles.
The guts of a flurgeon, taken out and cut to pieces, will still move, which may depend upon their great thickness and muscularity. Grew's Museum.
MUSCULOUS. adj. [musculosus, Fr. musculosus, Latin.]
1. Full of muscles; brawny.
2. Pertaining to a muscle.
The uvula has a musculosus power, and can dilate and contract that round hole, called the pupil of the eye, for the better moderating the transimission of light. More.
MOSE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Deep thought; close attention; absence of mind; brown study.
The tidings strange did him abashed make,
That still he sat long time astonish'd
As in great mus, he word to creature spake. Fa. Queen.
He was fill'd
With admiration and deep mus, to hear
Of things so high and strange. Milton.
2. The power of poetry.
Begin my mus. Cowley.
The mus-inspired train Triumph, and raise their drooping heads again. Waller.
Lodona's fate, in long oblivion cast,
The mus shall sing. Pope.
To MUSE. v. n. [mus, Fr. musen, Dutch; musse, Latin.]
1. To ponder; to think close; to study in silence.
If he spake courteously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he mus'd upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.
St. Augustine, speaking of devout men, noteth, how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they give unto the chapters read, how careful they were to remember the fame, and to mus thereupon by themselves. Hooker.
Caesar's father oft,
Bestow'd his lips on that unworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses. Shakeſp.
My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and my heart mus of understanding. Psalms xlix. v. 3.
Her face upon a sudden glittered, so that I was afraid of her, and mus'd what it might be. 2 Esdras x. 25.
All men mus'd in their hearts of John, whether he were the Christ or not. Luke iii. 15.
On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind. Dryden.
We mus so much on the one, that we are apt to overlook and forget the other. Atterbury's Sermons.
Man superiour walks
Amid the glad creation, *mus*ing praise,
And looking lively gratitude. Thomson's Spring.
2. To be absent of mind; to be attentive to something not present; to be in a brown study.
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks?
And given my treasures and my rights of thee,
To thick-eyed *mus*ing and curs'd melancholy. Shakeſp. Asch.
You suddenly arose and walk'd about,
*Mus*ing and fighting with yours arms across. Shakeſp. Asch.
The sad king
Feels sudden terror and cold shivering,
Lifts not to eat, still *mus*es, sleeps unround. Daniel.

3. To wonder; to be amazed.
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
 For what I will, I will. Shakep.
- I have a strange infirmity. Shakep. Macbeth.
MUSEFUL. adj. [from musé.] Deep thinking; silently thoughtful.
- Full of musical mopings, which preface
 The loss of reason, and conclude in rage. Dryden.
- MUSER*. n. f. [from musé.] One who muses; one apt to be absent of mind. Bailey.
- MUSEUM*. n. f. [muséum.] A repository of learned curiosities.
MUSEUM. n. f. [muséum.] A repository of learned curiosities.
1. Musbrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered:
 the true champion or musbroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour:
 in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the musbrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the off-sets or young musbrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hot beds. Miller.
2. An upstart; a wretch risen from the dunghill; a director of a company.
Musbrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unfown;
 and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach musbrooms. Bacon's Natural History.
- The lowly native of a country town. Dryden.
MUSROOMSTONE. n. f. [musroom and stone.] A kind of fossil.
- Fifteen musroomstones of the same shape. Woodward.
MUSICK. n. f. [musica; musique, Fr.]
1. The science of harmonical sounds.
 The man that hath no musick in himself,
 Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
 Is fit for treasons. Shakep. Merchant of Venice.
- Now look into the musick-master's gains,
 Where noble youth at vast expense is taught,
 But eloquence not valu'd at a groat. Dryden's Juvenal.
2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.
 When the spake,
 Sweet words, like dropping honey, the did shed;
 And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
 A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. F. Qu.
- Such musick
 Before was never made,
 But when of old the sons of morning sung.
 By musick minds an equal temper know,
 Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
 Various the fires with animated sounds,
 Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.
- We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arb. and Pope.
- MUSICAL*. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]
1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.
 The merry birds
 Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
 And made amongst themselves a sweet consort,
 That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort. F. Qu.
- Sweet bird that shunn'd the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholly;
 These chauntres of the wood among,
 I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.
- Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.
2. Belonging to musick.
 Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern music. Addison.
- MUSICALLY*. adv. [from musical.] Harmoniously; with sweet sound.
- Valentine, musically coy, Addison.
 Shun'd Phædra's arms.
- MUSICALNESS*. n. f. [from musical.] Harmony.
MUSICIAN. n. f. [musicus, Lat. musicus, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of music.
 Though the musician that shall play to you,
 Hand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
 Yet trait they shall be here. Shakep. Henry IV.
- The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
 When every goose is cackling, would be thought
 No better a musician than the wren. Shakep.
- A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in music, and not by rule. Bacon's Essays.

MUS

- The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung.
 Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young. Dryden.
- MUSK*. n. f. [muschio, Italian; musé, Fr.]
Musk is a dry, light and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity:
 its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochin China: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus: it is of the size of a common goat but taller; its head resembles that of the greyhound, and its ears stand erect like those of the rabbit: its tail is also erect and short, its legs moderately long, and its hoofs deeply cloven: its hair is a dusky brown, variegated with a faint cast of red and white, every hair being part-coloured: the bag which contains the musk, is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly; it consists of a thin membrane covered thinly with hair, resembling a small purse, and when genuine, the scent is so strong as to offend the head greatly: toward the orifice of the bag there are several glands, which serve for the secretion of this precious perfume, for the sake of which the Indians kill the animal. Hill.
- Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours;
 as civet and musk. Bacon's Natural History.
- MUSK*. n. f. [musca, Lat.] Grape hyacinth or grape flower.
Musk hath a bulbous shoot; the leaves are long and narrow: the flower is hermaphroditical, consisting of one leaf, and shaped like a pitcher, and cut at the top into six segments, which are reflexed; the ovary becomes a triangular fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of round seeds. Miller.
- MUSKAPPLE*. n. f. A kind of apple, Ans.
MUSKCAT. n. f. [muske and cat.] The animal from which musk is got.
- MUSKCHERRY*. n. f. A fort of cherry. Ans.
MUSKET. n. f. [musquet, Fr. moschetto, Italian, a small hawk.
 Many of the fire-arms are named from animals.]
1. A soldier's handgun. Thou
 Waft shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
 Of smoky muskets. Shakep. All's well that ends well.
- Practice to make swifter motions than any you have out of your muskets. Bacon.
- They charge their muskets, and with hot desire Of full revenge, renew the fight with fire. Waller.

 him, and advancing upon him. Clarendon.
- One was brought to us, shot with a musket-ball on the right side of his head. Wifeman's Surgery.
2. A male hawk of a small kind, the female of which is the sparrow hawk; so that eyas musket is a young unfledged male hawk of that kind. Hammer.
- Here comes little Robin.—
 —How now my eyes musket, what news with you. Shak.
- The musket and the coyfeer were too weak,
 Too fierce the falcon; but above the rest,
 The noble buzzard ever pleas'd me best. Dryden.
- MUSKETEE*. n. f. [from musket.] A soldier whose weapon is his musket.
 Notwithstanding they had lined some hedges with musketters, they pursued them till they were dispersed. Clarendon.
- MUSKETOO*. n. f. [musqueton, Fr.] A blunderbuss; a short gun of a large bore. Ditt.
- MUSKINESS*. n. f. [from muske.] The scent of musk.
MUSKMELO. n. f. [muske and melon.] A fragrant melon.
 The way of maturation of tobacco must be from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this in muskmelons, which are sown upon a hot bed dunged below, upon a bank turned upon the South sun. Bacon.
- MUSKPEAR*. n. f. [muske and pear.] A fragrant pear.
MUSKROSE. n. f. [muske and rose.] A rose so called, I suppose, from its fragrance.
 In May and June come roses of all kinds, except the muske, which comes later. Bacon's Essays.
- Thyris, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
 The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
 And sweeten'd every muske of the dale. Milton.
- The muske will, if a lusty plant, bear flowers in Autumn without cutting. Boyle.
- MUSKY*. adj. [from muske.] Fragrant; sweet of scent.
 There eternal summer dwells,
 And West winds, with musky wing,
 About the cedar's allies sing. Milton.
- Nard and Cassia's balmy smells.
- MUSLIN*. n. f. A fine stuff made of cotton.
 By the use of certain attire made of cambrick or muslin upon her head, she attained to such an evil art in the motion of her eyes. Taller, N° 110.
- In half-whipt muslin needles useless lies,
 And shuttle-cocks across the counter fly. Gay.
- MUSROL*.

MUS

- MUSROL*. n. f. [musrol, French.] The noseband of a horse's bridle. Bailey.
- MUSS*. n. f. A scramble.
 When I cry'd ho!

 And cry, your will? Shakep. Ant and Cleopatra.
- MUSSETA'TION*. n. f. [musset, Lat.] Murmur; grumble.
MUSULMAN. n. f. A Mahometan believer.
- MUST*. verb. imperfect. [musse, Dutch.] To be obliged. It is only used before a verb. Must is of all persons and tenses, and used of persons and things.
 Do you confess the bond?
 —I do.
 —Then must the Jew be merciful.
 —On what compulsion must I? tell me that. Shakespeare.
- MUST* I needs bring thy lion unto the land from whence thou camest? Gen. xxiv. 5.
- Fade, flowers, fade, nature will have it so;
 'Tis but what we must in our Autumn do. Waller.
- Because the same self-existing being necessarily is what he is, 'tis evident that what he may be, or hath the power of being, he must be. Grew.
- Every father and brother of the convent has a voice in the election, which must be confirmed by the pope. Addison.
- MUST*. n. f. [mustum, Latin.] New wine; new wort.
 If in the must of wine, or wort of beer, before it be tunned, the burrage stay a small time, and be often changed, it makes a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon's Natural History.
- As a swarm of flies in vintage time,
 About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
 Beat off, returns as oft with humming sound. Milton.
- The wine itself was luting to the rest,
 Still working in the must, and lately press'd. Dryden.
- A fragrant man that with sufficient must
 His casks replenish'd yearly; he no more Desir'd, nor wanted. Phillips.
- Liquors, in the act of fermentation, as must and new ale, produce spasms in the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- To MUST. v. a. [mus, Welsh, stinking; mus, Dutch, mouldi-nels; or perhaps from mus.] To mould; to make mouldy.
 Others are made of stone and lime; but they are subject to give and be moist, which will must corn. Mortimer.
- To MUST. v. n. To grow mouldy.
- MUSTA'CHES*. n. f. [mustaches, French.] Whiskers; hair on the upper lip.
- This was the manner of the Spaniards, to cut off their beards, save only their mustaches, which they wear long. Spens.
- MUSTARD*. n. f. [mustard, Welsh; mustard, Fr.] A plant.
 The flower consists of four leaves, which are placed in form of a cross, out of whose flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a fruit or pod, divided into two cells by an intermediate partition, to which the valves adhere on both sides, and are filled with roundish seeds: these pods generally end in a fungous horn, containing the like seeds. To these marks must be added, an acrid burning taste, peculiar to mustard. Misler.
- The pancakes were naught, and the mustard was good. Shak.
- Sauce like himself, offensive to its foes,
 The roguish mustard, dang'rous to the nose. King.
- Mustard*, taken in great quantities, would quickly bring the blood into an alkaline state, and destroy the animal.
Arbutnot.
- 'Tis your's to shake the foul,
 With thunder rumbling from the mustard bowl. Pope.
- Stick your candle in a bottle, a coffee cup, or a mustard
 pot. Swift.
- Common mustard seed is attenuant and resolvent: it warms the stomach, and excites appetite; but its principal medicinal use is external in sinapisms. Hill's Mat. Med.
- To MUSTER. v. n. To assemble in order to form an army.
 Why does my blood thus muster to my heart,
 So disposing all my other parts Of necessary times? Shakep. Meas. for Measure.
- They reach the destin'd place,
 And draw together. Blackmore's Creation.
- To MUSTER. v. a. [musteren, Dutch.]
1. To review forces.

- Review'd his muster'd race, and took the tale. Dryden.
- A man might have three hundred and eighteen men in his family, without being heir to Adam, and might muster them up, and lead them out against the Indians. Lacks.
2. To bring together.
 Had we no quarrel to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we would muster all From twelve to seventy. Shakep. Coriolanus.
- I'll muster up my friends, and meet your grace. Shakep.

MUT

- I could muster up, as well as you,
 My giants and my witches too. Donne.
- A daw tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.
- All the wise sayings and advices which philosophers could muster up to this purpose, have proved ineffectual to the common people. Tillotson.
- Having mustered up all the forces he could think of, the clouds above, and the deeps below: these, says he, are all the stores we have for water; and Moses directs us to no other for the causes of the deluge. Woodward's Natural History.
- MUSTER*. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A review of a body of forces.
 All the names
 Of thy confederates too, be no less great
 In hell than here: that when we would repeat
 Our strengths in muster, we may name you all. Ben. Jonst.
2. A register of forces mustered.
 Ye publish the musters of your own bands, and proclaim them to amount to thousands. Hooker.
- Deception takes wrong measures, and makes false musters, which founds a retreat instead of a charge, and a charge instead of a retreat. South's Sermons.
3. A collection: as, a muster of peacocks. Alfworth.
4. To pass MUSTER. To be allowed.
 Such excises will not pass muster with God, who will allow no man's idleness to be the measure of possible or impossible.
South's Sermons.
- Double dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.
- MUSTERBOOK*. n. f. [muster and book.] A book in which the forces are registered.
 Shadow will serve for Summer: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the musterbook. Shakep. H. IV.
- MUSTERMASTER*. n. f. [muster and master.] One who superintends the muster to prevent frauds.
 A noble gentleman, then mustermaster, was appointed em-bassador unto the Turkish emperor. Koeller's History.
- Mustermasters* carry the bell and ablest men in their pockets.
Raigill's Essays.
- MUSTER-ROLL*. n. f. [muster and roll.] A register of forces.
 How many insignificant combatants are there in the Christian camp, that only lend their names to fill up the muster-roll, but never dream of going upon service? Decay of Piety.
- One tragick sentence, if I dare deride,
 Which Betterton's grave action dignify'd;
 Or well-mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims,
 I thought perhaps a muster-roll of names. P. pe.
- MUSTY*. adv. [from musty.] Mouldily.
MUSTINESS. n. f. [from musty.] Mould; damp foulness.
 Keep them dry and free from mustiness. Even's Calendar.
- MUSTY*. adj. [from musty.]
1. Mouldy; spoiled with damp; moist and fetid.
 Was't thou fain, poor father,
 To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
 In short and musty straw. Shaksp. King Lear.
- Pistachoes, so they be good and not musty, made into a milk, are an excellent nourisher. Bacon's Natural History.
2. Stale; spoiled with age.
 While the grass grows—the proverb is somewhat musty. Sh.
- Let those that go by water to Gravesend prefer lying upon the boards, than on musty infectious straw. Farvey.
3. Vapid with fetidness.
 Let not, like Nævius, every error pass;
 The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass. Pope.
4. Dull; heavy; wanting activity; wanting practice in the occurrences of life.
 Xantippe, being married to a bookish man who has no knowledge of the world, is forced to take his affairs into her own hands, and to spirit him up now and then, that he may not grow musty and unfit for conversation. Addison's Spectator.
- MUTABILITY*. n. f. [mutabilitas, Fr. mutabilis, Latin.]
1. Changeableness; not continuance in the same state.
 The mutability of that end, for which they are made, maketh them also changeable. Hooker.
- My fancy was the air, most free,
 And full of mutability,
 Big with chimeras. Suckling.
- Plato confesses that the heavens and the frame of the world are corporeal, and therefore subject to mutability. Stillingfleet.
2. Inconstancy; change of mind.
 Ambitious, covetings, change of prides, disdain,
 Nice longings, flanders, mutability. Shakep. Cymbeline.
- MUTABLE*. adj. [mutabilis, Latin.]
1. Subject to change; alterable.
 Of things of the most accidental and mutable nature, accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance, yet God's preference is as certain in him as the memory is or can be in us. South's Sermons.
2. Inconstant; unfetted.
 For the mutable rank-scented many,
 Let them regard me, as I do not flatter. Shakep. Coriolanus.
- I saw.

MUT

I saw thee mutable
Of fancy, fear'd left one day thou would'st leave me. Milt.
MUTABLENESS. n. f. [from mutable.] Changeableness; uncertainty; instability.
MUTATION. n. f. [mutation, French; mutatio, Lat.] Change; alteration.

His honour
Was nothing but mutation, ay, and that
From one bad thing to worse. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The vicissitude or mutations in the superior globe are no fit matter for this present argument. Bacon's Essays.

To make plants grow out of the sun or open air is a great mutation in nature, and may induce a change in the seed. Bacon.
MUTE. adj. [mut, French; mutus, Latin.]

1. Silent; not vocal; not having the use of voice.
Why did he reason in my soul implant,
And speech, th' effect of reason? To the mute
My speech is lost; my reason to the brute. Dryden.
Mute solemn sorrow, free from female noise,
Such as the majesty of grief destroys. Dryden.

2. Having nothing to say.
Say he be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakespeare.

All fat mute,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts. Milton.
All the heav'nly choir stood mute,
And silence was in heav'n. Milt. Paradise Lost, l. iii.
The whole perplex'd ignoble crowd,
Mute to my questions, in my praises loud, Echo'd the word. Prior.

MUTE. n. f.
1. One that has no power of speech.
Either our history shall with full-mouth
Speak freely of our acts; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth. Shakef.
Your mute I'll be;

When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see. Shakef.
He that never hears a word spoken, no wonder if he remain speechless; as one mute do, who from an infant should be bred up amongst mute, and have no teaching. Hilder.

Let the figures, to which art cannot give a voice, imitate the muties in their actions. Dryden's Discreet.
2. A letter which without a vowel can make no sound.

Grammarians note the easy pronunciation of a mute before a liquid, which doth not therefore necessarily make the preceding vowel long. Hilder's Elements of Speech.
To MUTE. v. n. [mutir, French.] To dung as birds.
Mine eyes being open, the sparrows mutied warm dung into mine eyes. Tob. ii. 10.

I could not fright the crows,
Or the least bird from muting on my head. Ben. Johnson.
The bird not able to digest the fruit, from her inconverted
muting ariseth this plant. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MUTELY. adv. [from mute] Silently; not vocally.
Driving dumb silence from the portal door,
Where he had mutely fat two hours before. Milton.

To MUTILATE. v. a. [mutiler, Fr. mutile, Latin.] To deprive of some essential part.
Such fearing to concede a monstrosity, or mutilate the integrity of Adam, preventively conceive the creation of thirteen ribs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Sylburgius justly complains that the place is mutilated. Still.
Among the mutilated poets of antiquity there is none whose fragments are so beautiful as those of Sappho. Addison.

Aristotle's works were corrupted, from Strabo's account of their having been mutilated and consumed with moisture. Baker.
MUTILATION. n. f. [mutilation, Fr. mutile, from mutile, Lat.]
Deprivation of a limb, or any essential part.

The subject had been oppressed by fines, imprisonments, mutilation, pillories, and banishments. Clarendon.
Mutilation are not transmitted from father to son, the blind begetting such as can see: cripples, mutilate in their own persons, do come out perfect in their generations. Brown.

MUTINE. n. f. [mutin, French.] A mutineer; a mover of insurrection. Not in use.
In my heart there was a kind of fighting,
That would not let me sleep; methought I lay Worse than the mutines in the bilboes. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while. Shakespeare's King John.
MUTINEER. n. f. [from mutin, French.] A mover of sedition; an opposer of lawful authority.

The war of the duke of Urbino, head of the Spanish mutineers, was unjust. Bacon's War with Spain.
Set wide the muti's garden-gate;
For there our mutineers appoint to meet. Dryden.

They have cashiered several of their followers as mutineers, who have contradicted them in political conversations. Addison.
MUTINOUS. adj. [mutin, French.] Seditious; busy in insurrection; turbulent.

MUT

It tauntingly replied
To th' discontented members, th' mutinous parts,
That envied his receipt. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
The laws of England should be administered, and the mutinous severely suppressed. Hayward.

Lend me your guards, that if persuasion fail,
Force may against the mutinous prevail. Waller.
My ears are deaf with this impatient crowd;
Their wants are now grown mutinous and loud. Dryden.

MUTINOUSLY. adv. [from mutinous.] Seditiously; turbulently.
A woman, a young woman, a fair woman, was to govern a people in nature mutinously proud, and always before used to hard governours.

Men imprudently often, seditiously and mutinously sometimes, employ their zeal for persons. Spratt's Sermon.
MUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from mutinous.] Seditiousness; turbulence.

To MUTINY. v. n. [mutiner, French.] To rise against authority; to make insurrection; to move sedition.
The spirit of my father begins to mutiny against this fer-vitude. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The people mutiny, the fort is mine,
And all the soldiers to my will incline. Waller.
When Caesar's army mutinated, and grew troublesome, no argument could appease them. South's Sermon.

MUTINY. n. f. [from the verb.] Insurrection; sedition.
The king fled to a strong castle, where he was gathering forces to suppress this mutiny. Sidney.

I th' war,
Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they shew'd
Most valour, spoke not for them. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

In most strange postures We've seen him set himself. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
— There is a mutiny in's mind.
Less than if this frame

Of heav'n were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast earth. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. ii.

Soldiers grow pernicious to their master who becomes their servant, and is in danger of their mutinies, as much as any government of seditious. Temple.

To MUTTER. v. n. [mutire, mutare, Latin.] To grumble;
to murmur.
What would you ask me, that I would deny,
Or stand to mutt'ring on?

How! what does his cashier'd worship mutt'ring? Shakef.
Sky low'd, and mutt'ring thunder some sad drops
Wept, at completing of the mortal sin Original! Milton's Par. Lost, b. iii.

They may freely trespass, and do as they please; no man dare accuse them, no, not so much as mutt'ring against them.
Burton on Melancthon.

Bold Britons, at a brave bear-garden fray,
Are rous'd; and clatt'ring sticks cry, play, play, play:
Mean time your filthy foreigner will stare,
And mutt'ring to himself, ha, gens barbare!

And it is well he mutters, well for him;
Our butchers else would tear him limb from limb. Dryden.
When the tongue of a beautiful female was cut out, it could not forbear mutt'ring. Addison's Spectator.

To MUTTER. v. a. To utter with imperfect articulation; to grumble forth.
Amongst the soldiers this is mutt'ring,
That here you maintain sev'ral factions. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

A kind of men, so loose of soul,
That in their sleep will mutt'ring their affairs. Shakespeare. Othello.
Your lips have spoken lies, your tongue hath mutt'ring per-

A hateful prattling tongue,
That blows up jealousies, and heightens fears,
By mutt'ring poisonous whispers in mens ears. Creech.

MUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Murmur; obscure utterance.
Without his rod revers'd,
And backward mutters of dissembling power,
We cannot free the lady. Milton.

MUTTERER. n. f. [from mutt'ring.] Grumbler; murmurer.
MUTTERINGLY. adv. [from mutt'ring.] With a low voice;
without distinct articulation.

MUTTON. n. f. [mutton, French.]
1. The flesh of sheep dressed for food.
The fat of roasted mutton or beef, falling on the birds, will baste them. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

2. A sheep: now only in ludicrous language.
Here's too small a pasture for such store of muttons. Shak.
The flesh of muttons is better tasted where the sheep feed upon wild thyme and wholesome herbs. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward's Edu. VI.

MYO

MUTTONFIST. n. f. [mutton and fist.] A hand large and red.
Will he who saw the soldiers muttonfist,
And saw thee maul'd appear within the list
To witness truth. Dryden's Farnel, sat. 16.

MUTUAL. adj. [mutuel, French; mutuus, Lat.] Reciprocal; each acting in return or correspondence to the other.
Note a wild and wanton herd,
Fetiching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud,
If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
By the sweet power of music. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

What should most excite a mutual flame,
Your rural cares and pleasures are the same. Pope.
MUTUALLY. adv. [from mutual.] Reciprocally; in return.
He never bore
Like labour with the rest; where th' other instruments
Did see, and hear, device, instruct, walk, feel,
And mutually participate. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my affection. Shakespeare.
The tongue and pen mutually assist one another, writing what we speak, and speaking what we write. Hilder.

Pellucid substances act upon the rays of light at a distance, in refracting, reflecting and inflecting them, and the rays mutually agitate the parts of those substances at a distance for heating them. Newton's Opticks.

They mutually teach, and are taught, that lesson of vain confidence and security. Atterbury's Sermons.
May I the sacred pleasures know
Of strictest amity, nor ever want
A friend with whom I mutually may share Gladness and anguish. Philips.

MUTUALITY. n. f. [from mutual.] Reciprocation.
Villanous thoughts, Rodrigo! when these mutualities to marshall the way, hard at hand comes the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare's Othello.

MUZZLE. n. f. [moufou, French.]
1. The mouth of any thing; the mouth of a man in contempt.
But ever anon turning her muzzle toward me, she threw such a prospect upon me, as might well have given a surfeit to any weak lover's stomach. Sidney, b. ii.

Huygens has proved, that a bullet continuing in the velocity with which it leaves the muzzle of the cannon, would require twenty-five years to pass from us to the sun. Chapman.
If the poker be out of the way, or broken, stir the fire with the tongs; if the tongs be not at hand, use the muzzle of the bellows. Swift's Rules to Servants.

2. A fastening for the mouth, which hinders to bite.
The fifth Harry from curbed licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint; and the wild dog Shall flesh his tooth on ev'ry innocent. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Greyhounds, shewy fair,
And tall as flags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair;
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound. Dryden.

To MUZZLE. v. n. To bring the mouth near.
The bear muzzles, and smells to him, puts his nose to his mouth and to his ears, and at last leaves him. L'Estrange.

To MUZZLE. v. a.
1. To bind the mouth.
This butcher's cur is venom mouth'd, and I Have not the pow'r to muzzle him; therefore best Not wake him in his slumber. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

My dagger muzzled,
Left it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

The bear, the bear, and every savage name,
Wild in effect, though in appearance tame,
Lay waste thy woods, destroy thy blissful bow'r,
And muzzled though they seem, the mutes devour. Dryden.

Through the town with flow and solemn air,
Led by the nostril, walks the muzzled bear. Gay's Past.
2. To fondle with the mouth close. A low word.
The nurse was then muzzling and coaxing of the child.

My. pronoun possessive. [See MINE.] Belonging to me. My is used before a substantive, and mine anciently and properly before a vowel. My is now commonly used indifferently before both. My is used when the substantive follows, and mine when it goes before: as, this is my book; this book is mine.

Her feet she in my neck doth place.
I conclude my reply with the words of a Christian poet. Spenser.

If my soul had free election
To dispose of her affection,
I shall present my reader with a journal. Waller.

MYCHEN. n. f. [myncpen, Saxon.] A nun. Addison.
MYOGRAPHY. n. f. [μυρογραφία.] A description of the muscles. Diels.

MYOLOGY. n. f. [myologie, French.] The description and doctrine of the muscles.

MYS

To instance in all the particulars, were to write a whole system of myology. Gheyn's Phil. Principles.
MYOLOGY. n. f. Shortness of sight.

MYRIAD. n. f. [μυρία.]
1. The number of ten thousand.
2. Proverbially any great number.

Assemble thou,
Of all those myriads, which we lead, the chief. Milton.
Are there legions of devils who are continually designing and working our ruin? there are also myriads of good angels who are more cheerful and officious to do us good. Tillotson.

Safe sits the goddess in her dark retreat;
Around her, myriads of ideas wait,
And endless shapes. Prior.

MYRMIDON. n. f. [μυρμιδών.] Any rude ruffian; so named from the soldiers of Achilles.
The mass of the people will not endure to be governed by Clodius and Curio, at the head of their myrmidons, though these be ever so numerous, and composed of their own representatives. Swift.

MYROBALAN. n. f. [myrobalanus, Latin.] A fruit.
The myrobalans are a dried fruit, of which we have five kinds: they are fleshy, generally with a stone and kernel, having the pulpy part more or less of an austere acrid taste:
they are the production of five different trees growing in the East Indies, where they are eaten preserved: they serve also for making and for dressing leather: they have been long in great esteem for their quality of opening the bowels in a gentle manner, and afterwards strengthening them by their astringency; but the present practice rejects them all. Hill.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures; for it is sweet, and yet astringent. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 644.
MYROPOLIST. n. f. [μυροπολίτης.] One who sells unguents.

MYRRH. n. f. [myrrha, Latin; myrrhe, Fr.] A gum.
Myrrh is a vegetable product of the gum resin kind, sent to us in loose granules from the size of a pepper corn to that of a walnut, of a reddish brown colour, with more or less of an admixture of yellow: its taste is bitter and acrid, with a peculiar aromatick flavour, but very nauseous: its smell is strong, but not disagreeable: it is brought from Ethiopia, but the tree which produces it is wholly unknown. Our myrrh is the very drug known by the ancients under the same name: internally applied it is a powerful resolvent, and externally applied it is discutient and vulnerary. Hill's M. Med.

The myrrh sweet bleeding in the bitter wound. Spenser.
I drop in a little honey of roses, with a few drops of tincture of myrrh. Wise's Surgery.

MYRRHINE. adj. [myrrhinus, Latin.] Made of the myrrhine stone.
How they quaff in gold,
Crystal and myrrhine cups imboid with gems
And studs of pearl. Milton's Par. Reg. b. iv.

MYRTIFORM. n. f. [myrtus and form.] Having the shape of myrtle.

MYRTLE. n. f. [myrtus, Latin; myrte, Fr.] A fragrant tree sacred to Venus.
The flower of the myrtle consists of several leaves disposed in a circular order, which expand in form of a rose; upon the top of the foot-stalk is the ovary, which has a short star-like cup, divided at the top into five parts, and expanded; the ovary becomes an oblong umbilicated fruit, divided into three cells, which are full of kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle Imbroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shakespeare. As you like it.

I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the moss dew on the myrtle leaf
To his grand sea. Shakespeare. Antony and Cleopatra.

Democritus would have Concord like a fair virgin, holding in one hand a pomegranate, in the other a bundle of myrtle; for such is the nature of these trees, that if they be planted though a good space one from the other, they will meet, and with twining one embrace the other. Peascham.

Nor can the muse the gallant Sidney pass
The plume of war! with early lawrels crown'd,
The lover's myrtle and the poet's bay. Thomson's Summer.

MYSELF. n. f. [my and self.]
1. An emphatical word added to I: as, I myself do it; that is, not I by proxy; not another.

As his host,
I should against his murth'rer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. The reciprocal of I, in the oblique case.
They have a mist another pain, against which I should have been at a loss to defend myself. Swift's Examiner.

MYSTAGOGUE. n. f. [μυσταγωγός; mystagogus, Latin.] One who interprets divine mysteries; also one who keeps church relics, and shews them to strangers. Bailey.

MYSTERIARCH. n. f. [μυστήριον ἀρχή.] One presiding over mysteries.

MYSTÉRIOUS. adj. [mysterieux, French, from mystery.]
1. Inaccessible to the understanding; awfully obscure.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd, Though in mysterious terms. Milton's Par. Lost. b. x.
Then the true Son of knowledge first appear'd,
And the old dark mysterious clouds were clear'd. Denham.

2. Artfully perplexed.
Those princes who were most distinguished for their mysterious skill in government, found, by the event, that they had ill consulted their own quiet, or the happiness of their people. Swift's Thoughts on the State of Affairs.

MYSTÉRIOUSLY. adv. [from mysterious.]
1. In a manner above understanding.

2. Obscurely; enigmatically.
Our duty of preparation contained in this one word, try or examine, being after the manner of mysteries, mysteriously and secretly described, there is reason to believe that there is in it very much duty. Taylor's Worthing Communicant.
Each fair mysteriously was meant. Milton.

MYSTÉRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from mysterious.]

1. Holy obscurity.
My purpose is, to gather together into an union all those several portions of truth, and differing apprehensions of mysteriousness. Taylor's Worthing Communicant.

2. Artful difficulty or perplexity.
TO MYSTÉRISE. v. a. [from mystery.] To explain as enigmas.
Mysterizing their enigmas, they make the particular ones of the twelve tribes accommodable unto the twelve signs of the zodiac. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v.

MYSTERY. n. f. [μυστήριον; mysterion, Fr.]
1. Something above human intelligence; something awfully obscure.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Upon holy days, let the matter of your meditations be according to the mystery of the day; and to your ordinary devotions of every day, add the prayer which is fitted to the mystery. Taylor.

If God should please to reveal unto us this great mystery of the trinity, or some other mysteries in our holy religion, we should not be able to understand them, unless he would bestow on us some new faculties of the mind. Swift's Sermon.

2. An enigma; any thing artfully made difficult.
To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin brother of thy letter. Shak. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
Important truths still let your fables hold,
And moral mysteries with art unfold. Graville.

3. A trade; a calling: in this sense it should, according to Warburton, be written mystery, from mysterion, French, a trade.
And that which is the noblest mystery,
Brings to reproach and common infamy. Hubbard's Tale.

M Y T

Instruction, manners, mysteries and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries. Shakespeare.

MYSTICAL. adj. [mysticus, Latin.]

1. Sacredly obscure.

Let God himself that made me, let not man that knows not himself, be my instructor concerning the mystical way to heaven.
From salvation all flesh being excluded this way, God hath revealed a way mystical and supernatural. Hooker, b. i.

2. Involving some secret meaning; emblematical.
Ye five other wand'ring fires! that move
In mystical dance not without song, resound
His praise, who out of darkness call'd up light. Milton.

It is Christ's body in the sacrament and out of it; but in the sacrament not the natural truth, but the spiritual and mystical. Taylor's Worthing Communicant.

It is plain from the Apocalypse, that mystical Babylon is to be consumed by fire. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. Obscure; secret.

Left new fears disturb the happy state,
Know, I have search'd the mystical rolls of fate. Dryden.
MYSTICALLY. adv. [from mystical.] In a manner, or by an act, implying some secret meaning.

These two in thy sacred bosom hold,
Till mystically join'd but one they be. Dennis.
MYSTICALNESS. n. f. [from mystical.] Involvement of some secret meaning.

MYTHOLOGICAL. adj. [from mythology.] Relating to the explication of fabulous history.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and by tradition stole into a total verity, which was but partially true in its covert sense and morality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MYTHOLOGICALLY. adv. [from mythological.] In a manner suitable to the system of fables.

MYTHOLOGIST. n. f. [from mythology.] A relator or expounder of the ancient fables of the heathens.

The grammarians and mythologists seem to be altogether unacquainted with his writings.
It was a celebrated problem among ancient mythologists, What was the strongest thing, what the wisest, and what the greatest? Norris's Miscell.

TO MYTHOLOGIZE. v. n. [from mythology.] To relate or explain the fabulous history of the heathens.

MYTHOLOGY. n. f. [μυθολογία and λόγος; mythologia, French.] System of fables; explication of the fabulous history of the gods of the heathen world.

The modesty of mythology deserves to be commended: the scenes there are laid at a distance; it is once upon a time, in the days of yore, and in the land of Utopia. Bentley.

N A K

N. A semi-vowel, has in English an invariable sound; as, no, name, net; it is sometimes after n almost lost; as, condemn, content.
TO NAB. v. a. [nappa, Swedish.] To catch unexpectedly; to seize without warning. A word seldom used but in low language.

NADIR. n. f. [Arabic.] The point under foot directly opposite to the zenith.

As far as four bright signs comprize,
The distant zenith from the nadir lies. Creech.

NAFF. n. f. A kind of tufted sea-bird. Creech.

NAG. n. f. [nagge, Dutch.]
1. A small horse. A horse in familiar language.
A hungry lion would fain have been dealing with good horse-flesh; but the nag would be too fleet. L'Estrange.

Thy nag, the leanest things alive,
So very hard thou lov'st to drive. Prior.

2. A paramour; in contempt.
Your ribald nag of Egypt
Hoists sails, and flies. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

NAIL. n. f. [nægl, Saxon; nagel, German.]
1. The hard crust or horny substance at the ends of the fingers and toes.

My nails can reach unto thine eyes. Shakespeare.
The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass, the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles. Dryden.

The nails of our fingers give strength to those parts in the nerves and tendons that are put to; and defend the numerous 2. The talons of birds and beasts.

3. A spike of metal by which things are fastened together.
As one nail by strength drives out another;
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object soon forgotten. Shakespeare.

For the body of the ships, no nation doth equal England, nor for the oaken timber to build them; and we need not borrow iron for spikes or nails, to fasten them together.
The load-stone mines in the shore of India, are so placed in abundance and vigor, that it proves an adventure of hazard to pass those coasts in a ship with iron nails. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

A beechen pail
Hung by the handle, on a driven nail. Dryden.
An equivocal word used for the nail of the hand or foot, and for an iron nail to fasten any thing. Watts.

4. A stud; a bolt.
5. A kind of measure; two inches and a quarter.

6. On the nail. Readily; immediately; without delay. I suppose from a counter studded with nails.
We want our money on the nail,
The banker's ruin'd if he pays. Swift's Poems.

TO NAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with nails.
To the cross he nails thy enemies,
The law that is against thee, and the sins
Of all mankind, with him are crucify'd. Milton's P. Lost.

He clasp'd his hand upon the wounded part.
The second shaft came swift and unespied,
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side. Dryden.

2. To stud with nails.
In golden armour glorious to behold,
The fivets of your arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

NAILER. n. f. [from nail.] One whose trade is to forge nails; a nail-maker.

NA'KED. adj. [nacod, Saxon.]
1. Wanting cloaths; uncovered; bare.
A philosopher being asked in what a wife man differed from a fool? answered, send them both naked to those who know them not, and you shall perceive. Bacon, Apophth. 242.

He pitying how they flood
Before him naked to the air, that now

Must suffer change;
As father of his family, he clad
Their nakedness with skins of beasts. Milton, P. Lost.
Ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow. Addison.

2. Unarmed; defenceless; unprovided.
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

3. Plain; evident; not hidden.
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

4. Mere; bare; wanting the necessary additions; simple; abstracted.
Not that God doth require nothing unto happiness at the hands of men; saving only a naked belief, for hope and charity we may not exclude; but that without belief all other things are as nothing, and it is the ground of those other divine virtues. Hooker, b. i. p. 37.

NA'KEDLY. adv.
1. Without covering.

2. Simply; merely; barely; in the abstract.
Though several single letters nakedly considered, are found to be articulations only of spirit or breath, and not of breath vocalized; yet there is that property in all letters of aptness, to be conjoined in syllables. Holder.

3. Discoverably; evidently.
So blinds the sharpest counsels of the wife
This overshadowing Providence on high,
And dazzleth all their clearest sighted eyes,
That they see not how nakedly they lie. Daniel Civil War.

NA'KEDNESS. n. f. [from naked.]
1. Nudity; want of covering.

My face I'll grime with filth;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky. Shak. K. Lear.

Nor he their outward only; with the skins
Of beasts; but inward nakedness, much more Opprobrious! with his robe of righteousness
Arraving, cover'd from his father's sight.
I entreat my gentle readers to sow on their truckers again, and not to imitate the nakedness, but the innocence of their mother Eve. Addison's Guard. N. 100.

2. Want of provision for defence.
Thy only armour is thy nakedness. Prior.

3. Plainness; evidence; want of concealment.
Why seek'st thou to cover with excuse
That which appears in proper nakedness? Shakespeare.

NALL. n. f. An awl, such as collar-makers use. Tusser.
Whole bridle and saddle, whilthead and nall,
With collars and harness. Tusser's Husb.

NAME. n. f. [nama, Saxon; naem, Dutch; enim, Erse.]
1. The discriminative appellation of an individual.

What is thy name?
Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.
No! though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.
My name's Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He called their names after the names his father had called them. Gen. xxvii. 18.

2. The term by which any kind or species is distinguished.
What's in a name? That which we call a rose,
By any other name would smell as sweet. Shakespeare.

3. Person.
If every particular idea that we take in, should have a distinct name, names must be endless. Locke.

They list with women each degen'rate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden.

4. Reputation; character.

NAM

The king's army was the last enemy the west had been acquainted with, and had left no good name behind.
Clarendon, b. viii.
 5. Renown; fame; celebrity; eminence; praise; remembrance; memory; distinction; honour.
 What men of name resort to him?
 Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
 And Rice ap Thomas with a valiant crew,
 And many others of great name and worth.
Shakesf.

Dryden.
 Approv'd in fight, and men of mighty name.
Dryden.
 These shall be towns of mighty fame,
 Tho' now they lie obscure, and lands without a name.
Dryden, Æn. vi.
 Bartolus is of great name; whose authority is as much valued amongst the modern lawyers, as Papinian's was among the ancients.
Baker's Reflex. on Learning.
 6. Power delegated; imputed character.
 In the name of the people,
 And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 7. Fictitious imputation.
 When Ulysses with fallacious arts,
 Had forg'd a treason in my patron's name,
 My kinsman fell.
Dryden, Æn.
 8. Appearance; not reality; assumed character.
 I'll to him again, in the name of Brook;
 He'll tell me all his purpose.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
 There is a friend which is only a friend in name.
Ecclus. xxxvii.
 9. An opprobrious appellation.
 Bids her confess; calls her ten thousand names;
 In vain she kneels.
Granville's Poems.
 Like the watermen of Thames
 I row by, and call them names.
Swift's Miscel.
 To NAME, v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To discriminate by a particular appellation.
 I mention here a son of the king's whom Florizel
 I now name to you; and with speed to pace
 To speak of Perdita.
Shakespeare's Winter Tale.
 Thou hast had seven husbands, neither wast thou named after any of them.
Tob. iii. 8.
 His name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived.
Luke ii. 21.
 2. To mention by name.
 Accustom not thy mouth to swearing: neither use thyself to the naming of the Holy One.
Ecclus. xxiii. 9.
 3. To specify; to nominate.
 Did my father's godson seek your life?
 He whom my father nam'd? your Edgar.
Shakespeare.
 Bring me him up whom I shall name.
Sam. xxviii. 8.
 Let any one name that proposition, whose terms or ideas were either of them innate.
Locke.
 4. To utter; to mention.
 Let my name be named on them.
Gen. xlviii. 16.
 NAMELESS, adj. [from name.]
 1. Not distinguished by any discriminative appellation.
 On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
 A headless carcass, and a nameless thing.
Denham.
 The milky way,
 Fram'd of many nameless stars.
Waller.
 Thy reliques, Rowe, to this fair shrine we trust,
 And sacred, place by Dryden's awful dust;
 Beneath a rude and nameless stone he lies,
 To which thy tomb shall guide enquiring eyes.
Pope.
 2. One of which the name is not known or mentioned.
 Little credit is due to accusations of this kind, when they come from suspected, that is, from nameless pens.
Aitken's Sermons.
 NAMELY, adv. [from name.] Particularly; specially; to mention by name.
 It can be to nature no injury, that of her we say the same which diligent beholders of her works have observed; namely, that the provident for all living creatures nourishment which may suffice.
Hobbes, b. iii. f. 4.
 Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
 To none of these, except it be the last;
 Namely, some love that drew him off from home.
Shakespeare.
 The council making remonstrances unto queen Elizabeth, of the continual conspiracies against her life; and namely, that a man was lately taken, who stood ready in a very dangerous and suspicious manner to do the deed; advised her to go less abroad weakly attended. But the queen answered, that she had rather be dead, than put in custody.
Bacon, Apophth. 14.
 For the excellency of the soul, namely, its power of divining in dreams; that several such divinations have been made, none can question.
Addison's Spectator.

 riches, and reputation.
Addison's Guardian.
 NA'MER, n. f. [name.] One who calls or knows any by name.
 NA'MESAKE, n. f. One that has the same name with another.
 Nor does the dog fish at sea, much more make out the dog of land, than that his cognominal, or namesake in the heavens.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
 One author is a mole to another: it is impossible for them to discover beauties; they have eyes only for blemishes;
 they can indeed see the light, as is said of their namesakes;
 but immediately shut their eyes.
Addison's Spectator.
 NAP, n. f. [nappean, Saxon, to sleep.]
 1. Slumber; a short sleep.
 Mopla sat frowning of sleep with open mouth making such a noise, as no body could lay the stealing of a nap to her charge.
Sidney, b. ii.
 Let your bounty
 Take a nap, and I will awake it anon.
Shakespeare.
 The sun had long since in the lap
 Of Thetis, taken out his nap.
Hudibras, p. ii.
 So long as I'm at the forge you are still taking your nap.
Leffrange, Fab.
 2. [nappe, Saxon.] Down; villous substance.
 Amongst those leaves the made a butterfly
 With excellent device and wondrous flight;
 The velvet nap, which on his wings doth lie,
 The filken down, with which his back is dight.
Spenser.
 Jack Cade the clothier, means to dress the Commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it.
 Plants, though they have no prickles, have a kind of downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; which down or nap cometh of a subtil spirit, in a soft or fat substance.
Bacon.
 Ah! where must needy poet seek for aid
 When dust and rain at once his coat invade;
 His only coat! where dust confus'd with rain
 Roughens the nap, and leaves a mingled stain.
Swift.
 To NAPP, v. a. [nappean, Saxon.] To sleep; to be drowsy or secure.
 They took him napping in his bed.
Hudibras, p. i.
 A wolf took a dog napping at his master's door.
Leffrange.
 What is seriously related by Helmont, that seal lions stoop in a vessel that hath wheat in it, will in twenty-one days time turn the wheat into mice; without conjuring, one may guess to have been the philosophy and information of some housewife, who had not so carefully covered her wheat, but that the mice could come at it, and were there taken napping, just when they had made an end of their good cheer.
Bentley's Sermons.
 NAPPING, n. f. [nap and take.] Surprise; seizure on a sudden; unexpected onset, like that made on men asleep.
 Napping, assaults, spoiling, and firings, have in our fore-father's days, between us and France, been very common.
Carver.
 NAPE, n. f. [Of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it to come from nap, the hair that grows on it; Yunius, with his usual Greek fagacity, from ναπα, a hill; perhaps from the same root with nepe.] The joint of the neck behind.
 Turn your eyes towards the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves.
Shakespeare.
 Domitian dreamed, the night before he was slain, that a golden head was growing out of the nape of his neck.
Bacon.
 NAPER, n. f. [naperia, Italian.] Table-linen.
Di.
 NAPHTHA, n. f. [naphtha, Lat.] An herb.
 Naphtha is a very pure, clear, and thin mineral fluid, of a very pale yellow, with a cast of brown in it. It is soft and oily to the touch, of a sharp and unpleasing taste, and of a brisk and penetrating smell; of the bituminous kind. It is extremely ready to take fire, and in places where it is frequent, it exhales a vapour that takes fire at the approach of any flame, and burns to a great distance, sometimes pread-ing in an instant over half a mile or more of ground, and continuing alight a great while. It is found floating on the waters of springs. It is principally used externally in para-lytick cases, and in pains of the limbs.
Hill's Mat. Med.
 Strabo represents it as a liquation of bitumen. It swims on the top of the water of wells and springs. That found about Babylon is in some springs whitish, tho' it be generally black, and differs little from Petroleum.
Woodward.
 NAPPINESS, n. f. [nappy.] The quality of having a nap.
 NAPPIN, n. f. [from nap; which etymology is oddly favoured by Virgil, Tonitruque servant mantilia villis; naperia, Italian.]
 1. Cloaths used at table to wipe the hands.
 By art were weaved nappins, shirte, and coats, inconspicuous by fire.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 The same matter was woven into a napkin at Louvain, which was cleaned by being burnt in the fire.
 Napkins, Helicobalus had of cloth of gold, but they were most commonly of linnen, or soft wool.
Arbutnot.
 2. A

NAR

2. A hankerchief. Obsolete. This sense is retained in Scotland.
 I am glad I have found this naphin;
 This was her first remembrance from the moor.
Shakespeare.
 NA'PLESS, adj. [from nap.] Wanting nap; threadbare.
 Were he to stand for counsel, ne'er would he Appear in th' market place, nor on him put
 The naphin's vesture of humility.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 NA'PPY, adj. [from nap. Mr. Lye derives it from nappie, Saxon, a cup.] Frothy; spumy; from nap; whence apples and ale are called lamb's wool.
 When I my threacher heard,
 With nappy beer I to the barn repair'd.
Gay's Post.
 NARCISSUS, n. f. [Latin; narcissus, Fr.] A daffodil.
 Nor Narcissus fair
 As o'er the fabled mountain hanging still.
Thomson.
 NARCO'TICK, adj. [narcotico, narcotique, Fr.] Producing torpor, or stupefaction.
 Narcotick includes all that part of the materia medica, which any way produces sleep, whether called by this name, or hypnotics, or opiates.
Quincy.
 The ancients esteemed it narcotick or stupefactive, and it is to be found in the list of poisons by Dioscorides.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
 NARD, n. f. [nardus, Lat. νάρδος, Gr.]
 1. Spikenard; a kind of ointment.
 2. An odorous shrub.
 Smelt o' the bud o' the briar,
 Or the nard in the fire.
Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
 He now is come
 Into the blissful field, thro' groves of myrrh,
 And flow'ring odours, cassia, nard and balm.
Milton.
 NARE, n. f. [naris, Latin.] A nostril not used, except as in the following passage, in allusion.
 There is a Machiavelian plot,
 Though every nose elact it not.
Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.
 NARWHALE, n. f. A species of whale.
 Those long horns preserved as precious beauties, are but the teeth of narwhales.
Brown's Vulg. Err. b. iii.
 NARRABLE, adj. [from narre.] Capable to be told or related.
 NARRATE, v. a. [narro, Latin.] To relate; to tell; a word only used in Scotland.
 NARRATION, n. f. [narratio, Latin; narration, Fr.] Account; relation; history.
 He did doubt of the truth of that narration.
Abbot.
 They that desire to look into the narrations of the story, for the variety of the matter we have been careful might have profit.
 Homer introduces the best instructions, in the midst of the plainest narrations.
Notes on the Odyssey.
 NARRATIVE, adj. [narrativus, Fr. from narro, Lat.]
 1. Relating; giving an account.
 The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences dispositive and enacting; therefore credit ought to be given to these acts, though the words be narrative.
Ayliffe's Pargen.
 2. Storytelling; apt to relate things past.
 Age, as Dante says, is always narrative.
Dryden.
 The poor, the rich, the valiant and the sage,
 And boasting youth, and narrative old age.
Pope.
 NARRATIVE, n. f. A relation; an account; a story.
 In the instructions I here give to others, concerning what they should do, take a narrative of what you have done.
South's Sermons.
 Cynthia was much taken with my narrative. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 58.
 NARRATIVELY, adv. [from narrative.] By way of relation.
 The words of all judicial acts are written narratively, unless it be in sentences wherein dispositive and enacting terms are made use of.
Ayliffe's Pargen.
 NARRATOR, n. f. [narrator, French; from narro, Latin.] A teller; a relater.
 Consider whether the narrator be honest and faithful, as well as skilful; whether he hath no peculiar gain or profit by believing or reporting it.
Watts's Logic.
 To NARRIFY, v. a. [from narro, Latin.] To relate; to give account of; not in use.
 I ever narrify'd my friends,
 Of whom he is chief, with all the size that verity
 Would without lapsing suffer.
Shakespeare.
 NARROW, adj. [narrow, Saxon, from nryn, near.]
 1. Not broad or wide, having but a small distance from side to side.
 Edward from Belgia,
 Hath pass'd in safety thro' the narrow seas.
Shakespeare.
 The Angel stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left.
Numb. ii. 26.
 In a narrow-bottom'd ditch cattle cannot turn themselves.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
 2. Small; of no great extent.
 From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a smallness in the exclusion; but this interesteth no infirmity.
Brown.
 3.

3. Covetous; avaritious.
 To narrow breads he comes all wrapt in gain,
 To swelling hearts he shines in honour's fire.
Sidney.
 4. Contracted; of confined sentiments; ungenerous.
 Nothing more shakes any society than mean divisions between the several orders of its members, and their narrow-hearted repining at each other's gain.
Spence's Sermon.
 The greatest understanding is narrow.
How much of God and nature is there, whereof we never had any idea?
Gray, Cypsel. b. ii. c. 8.
 The hopes of receiving good from those whom we gratify, would produce but a very narrow and flinted charity.
Smallbridge's Sermons.
 A salamander grows familiar with a stranger at first sight; and is not so narrow-spirited as to observe, whether the person he talks to, be in breeches or in petticoats.
Addison.
 It is with narrow-soul'd people as with narrow-neck'd bottles; the less they have in them the more noise they make in pouring it out.
Swift's Miscellanies.
 5. Near; within a small distance.
 Then Mneſtheus to the head his arrow drove,
 But made a glancing shot; and mis'd the dove;
 Yet mis'd to narrow, that he cut the cord
 Which fasten'd by the foot the flitting bird.
Dryden.
 6. Close; vigilant; attentive.
 The orb he roam'd
 With narrow search; and with inspection deep Consider'd ev'ry creature, which of all
 Most opportune might serve his wiles.
Milt. Par. Lost.
 Many malicious spies are searching into the actions of a great man, who is not always the best prepared for so narrow an inspection.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 265.
 To NARROW, v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To diminish with respect to breadth or wideness.
 In the wall he made narrow'd reefs, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.
1 Kings vi. 6.
 By reason of the great Continent of Brasilia, the needle deflecteth toward the land twelve degrees; but at the Straits of Magellan, where the land is narrow'd, and the sea on the other side, it varieth about five or six.
Brown's Vulg. Err.
 A government, which by alienating the affections, losing the opinions, and crossing the interests of the people, leaves out of its compass the greatest part of their consent, may justly be said, in the same degree it loses ground, to narrow its bottom.
Temple's Miscel.
 2. To contract; to impair in dignity of extent or influence.
 One science is incomparably above all the rest, where it is not by corruption narrow'd into a trade, for mean or ill ends, and secular interests; I mean, theology, which contains the knowledge of God and his creatures.
Locke's Works.
 3. To contract in sentiment or capacity of knowledge.
 Delicacy does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant.
Government of the Tongue.
 How hard it is to get the mind, narrow'd by a scanty collection of common ideas, to enlarge itself to a more copious stock.
Locke's Works.
 Lo! ev'ry finish'd son returns to thee!
 Bounded by nature, narrow'd still by art,
 A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
Pope's Dunci. b. iv.
 4. To confine; to limit.
 By admitting too many things at once into one question, the mind is dazzled and bewildered; whereas by limiting and narrowing the question, you take a fuller survey of the whole.
Watts's Logic.
 Our knowledge is much more narrow'd, if we confine ourselves to our own solitary reasonings, without much reading.
Watts.
 5. [In farriery.] A horse is said to narrow, when he does not take ground enough, and does not bear far enough out to the one hand or to the other.
Farr. Dict.
 NARROWLY, adv. [from narrow.]
 1. With little breadth or wideness; with small distance between the sides.
 2. Contractedly; without extent.
 The church of England is not so narrowly calculated, that it cannot fall in with any regular species of government.
Swift's Sentin. of the Church of England.
 3. Closely; vigilantly; attentively.
 My fellow-schoolmaster
 Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly.
Shakespeare.
 If it be narrowly considered, this colour will be represented or encountered, by imputing to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty.
Bacon.
 For a considerable treasure hid in my vineyard, search narrowly when I am gone.
Leffrange.
 A man's reputation draws eyes upon him that will narrowly inspect every part of him.
Addison.
 4. Nearly; within a little.
 Some private vessels took one of the Aquapula ships, and very narrowly mis'd of the other.
Swift.
 5. Avaritiously; sparingly.

In our Gothic cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, or run out in length. Addison on Italy.

2. Want of extent; want of comprehension.

3. Confined state; contractedness.
That prince, who should be so wise and godlike, as by established laws of liberty to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, and narrowness of party, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke's Works.

The most learned and ingenious society in Europe, confesses the narrowness of human attainments. Glauco. Scept.

4. Meanness; poverty.

5. Want of capacity.
Another disposition in men, which makes them improper for philosophical contemplations, is not so much from the narrowness of their spirit and understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Bacon's Theor. of the Earth.

well as of all the naval stores that furnish the world. Temple.
NAVE. n. f. [nap, Saxon.]

1. The middle part of the wheel in which the axle moves.
Out, out, thou trumpet fortune! all you gods

In general synod take away her power;
Break all the spokes and felines from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n,
As low as to the fiends. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

In the wheels of waggons the hollows of the naves, by their swift rotations on the ends of the axle-trees, produce a heat sometimes so intense as to set them on fire. Ray.

2. [From navis, nave, old Fr.] The middle part of the church distinct from the aisles or wings.

It comprehends the nave or body of the church, together with the chancel. Ayliffe's Par.

NAVEL. n. f. [navel, navel, Saxon.]

1. The point in the middle of the belly, by which embryos communicate with the parent.

The use of the navel is to continue the infant unto the mother, and by the vessels thereof to convey its aliments.

As children, while within the womb they live,
Feed by the navel: here they feed not. Devices.

There is a superintending Providence, that some animals will hunt for the teat before they are quite gotten out of the secundines and parted from the navelfring. Derham.

2. The middle; the interior part.

Being prest to the war,
Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shakespeare's Cor.

Within the navel of this hideous wood,
Immur'd in cypress shades, a forecure dwells. Milton.

NAVELGALL. n. f.

Navalgall is a bruise on the top of the chine of the back, behind the saddle, right against the navel, occasioned either by the saddle being split behind, or the stuffing being wanting, or by the crupper buckle fitting down in that place, or some hard weight or knobs lying directly behind the saddle.

NAVELWORT. n. f.

It hath the appearance of housebeck; from which it differs only in having an oblong tubulous flower of one leaf, divided at the top into five parts. This plant is used in medicine, and grows wild upon old walls. Miller.

NAVEW. n. f. [napus, Lat. naves, naves, Fr.]

It agrees in most respects with the turnep; but has a lesser root, and somewhat warmer in taste. The species are three. In the life of Ely the third species, which is wild, is very much cultivated, it being the cole seed from which they draw the oil. Miller.

NAUGHT. adj. [naht, naht, Saxon; that is, ne aught, not any thing.] Bad; corrupt; worthless.

With them that are able to put a difference between things naught and things indifferent in the church of Rome, we are yet at controversy about the manner of removing that which is naught. Hobbes, b. iv.

Thy sister's naught: Oh Regan! she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shakespeare's Lear.

NAUGHT. n. f. Nothing. This is commonly, though improperly, written naught. See NAUGHT and NAUGHT.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at naught,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench. Shakespeare's Lear.

NAUGHTILY. adv. [from naughtily.] Wickedly; corruptly.

NAUGHTINESS. n. f. [from naughtily.] Wickedness; badness.
Slight wickedness or parcelcuity, as of children.

No remembrance of naughtiness delights but mine own;
and methinks the accusing his traps might in some manner excuse my fault, which certainly I loth to do. Sidney, b. ii.

NAUGHTY. adj. [See NAUGHT.]

1. Bad; wicked; corrupt.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.

These naughty times

Put bars between the owners and their rights.
How far that little candle throws his beams!

So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakespeare's Lear.

2. It is now seldom used but in ludicrous censure.

If gentle slumbers on thy temples creep,
But naughty man, thou dost not mean to sleep,
Betake thee to thy bed. Dryden.

NAVICULAR. adj. [navicularis, Lat. naviculaire, Fr.] In anatomy, the third bone in each foot that lies between the astragalus and ossa cuneiformia. Diet.

NAVIGABLE. adj. [navigable, Fr. navigabilis, Latin.] Capable of being passed by ships or boats.

The first-peopled cities were all founded upon these navigable rivers, or their branches, by which the one might give succour to the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Almighty Jove surveys

Earth, air, and shores, and navigable seas. Dryden.

NAVIGABLENESS. n. f. [from navigable.] Capacity to be passed in vessels.

TO NAVIGATE. v. n. [navigo, Lat. navigo, Fr.] To sail;
to pass by water.

The Phoenicians navigated to the extremities of the western ocean. Arbutnot on Catin.

TO NAVIGATE. v. a. To pass by ships or boats.

Drusus, the father of the emperor Claudius, was the first who navigated the northern ocean. Arbutnot on Catin.

NAVIGATION. n. f. [navigation, Fr. from navigare.]

1. The art or practice of passing by water.

Our shipping for number, strength, mariners, pilots, and all things that appertain to navigation, is as great as ever.

The loadstone is that great help to navigation. Bacon.

Rude as their ships, was navigation then,
No useful compass or meridian known;
Coasting, they kept the land within their ken,
And knew no north but when the polestar shone. Dryden.

When Pliny names the Pœni as inventors of navigation, it must be understood of the Phœnicians, from whom the Carthaginians are descended. Arbutnot on Catin.

2. Vessels of navigation.

Thou'nt unto the winds, and let them fight Against the churches, tho' the yelty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up. Shakespeare's Macb.

NAVIGATOR. n. f. [navigateur, Fr. from navigare.] Sailor; seaman; traveller by water.

By the founding of navigators, that sea is not three hundred and sixty foot deep. Brer.

The rules of navigators must often fail. Brown's V. Err.

The contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds, tides, and the sight of the heavens. Wilkin's Mach. Magic.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only a globe in speculation, has since been surrounded by the boldness of many navigators. Temple.

NAV'LAG. n. f. [navium, Lat.] The freight of passengers in a ship.

NAV'MACHY. n. f. [navumachie, Fr. navumachie, Latin.] A mock sea fight.

TO NAUSEATE. v. n. [from nausen, Latin.] To grow squeamish; to turn away with disgust.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and nauseate, and grow tired of a particular subject before you have finished it. Watts's Improv. of the Mind.

TO NAUSEATE. v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we fungle out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cryed up in one age, which are decayed and naused in another. Brown's V. Err.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauses the praise, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the bell,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.

He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were naused, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAUSEOUS. adj. [from nausen, Latin; nauseos, Fr.] Loath-some; disgusting; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite.
And from those gaieties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Dryden.

Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, 'till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Ray.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAUSEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseosus.] Loathsome; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their satire's praise;

So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth's Disp.

NAUSEOUSNESS. n. f. [from nauseosus.] Loathfomeness; que-sition of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Aurengzeib.

NAUTICAL. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

NAUTICK. adj. [nauticus, Latin.] Pertaining to sailors.

He elegantly shewed by whom he was drawn, which de-painted the nautical compass with aut magnas, aut magna. Cam.

NAUTILUS. n. f. [Latin; nautilus, Fr.] A shell fish furnished with something analogous to oars and a sail. Lean.

NAUTICAL. adj. [

NEE

Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest. Addison on Italy.
NEEDFULLY. adv. [from needful.] Necessarily.
They who
Dare for these poems, yet both ask and read,
And like them too; must needfully, tho' few,
Be of the best. Ben. Johnson.
NEEDFULNESS. n. f. [from needful.] Necessity.
NEEDFULLY. adv. [from needful.] In poverty; poorly.
NEEDINESS. n. f. [from needful.] Want; poverty.
Whereas men have many reasons to persuade; to use them all at once, weakeneth them. For it argueth a neediness in every of the reasons, as if one did not trust to any of them, but fled from one to another. Bacon.
NEEDLE. n. f. [næbl, Saxon.]
1. A small instrument pointed at one end to pierce cloth, and perforated at the other to receive the thread, used in sewing.
For him your curious needle paints the flowers. Dryden.
2. The small steel bar which in the mariners compals stands regularly north and south.
The use of the loadstone, and the mariners needle was not then known. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
NEEDLE-FISH. n. f. [needle and fish.] A kind of sea-fish.
One rhomboidal bony scale of the needle-fish. Woodward.
NEEDFUL. n. f. [needle and full.] As much thread as is generally put at one time in the needle.
NEEDLER. n. f. [from needle.] He who makes
NEEDLEMAKER. n. f. needles.
NEEDLEWORK. n. f. [from needle and work.]
1. The business of a sempstress.
2. Embroidery by the needle.
In needleworks and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a lightsome ground, than a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground. Bacon.
In a curious brede of needlework, one colour falls away by such just degrees, and another rises so insensibly, that we see the variety without being able to distinguish the total vanishing of the one from the first appearance of the other.
Addison's Essay on the Georgicks.
NEEDLESLY. adv. [from needless.] Unnecessarily; without need.
We render languages more difficult to be learnt, and need- lessly advance orthography into a troublesome art. Holder.
NEEDLESSNESS. n. f. [from needless.] Unnecessariness.
To explain any of St. Paul's Epistles, after so great a train of expostors, might seem censurable for its needlessness, did not the daily examples of pious and learned men justify
it. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.
NEEDLESS. adj. [from need.]
1. Unnecessary; not requisite.
Their exception against easiness, as if that did nourish ignorance, proceedeth altogether of a needless jealousy. Hook.
This sudden stab of rancour I misdoubt;
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward. Sha. R. III.
Would not these be great and needless abatements of their happines, if it were confined within the compas of this life only? Atterbury.
2. Not wanting; out of use.
For his weeping in the needless stream,
Poor dear, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament,
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Sha. As you Like it.
NEEDMENT. n. f. [from need.] Something necessary.
Behind
His scrip did hang, in which his needments he did bind.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
NEEDS. adv. [nebes, Saxon, unwilling.] Necessarily; by compulsion; indigently.
The general and perpetual voice of men is, as the sentence of God himself; for that which all men have at all times learned, nature herself must needs have taught. Hooker.
God must needs have done the thing which they imagine was to be done. Hooker, b. iii.
I must needs after him, madam, with my letter. Sha.
Another being elected and his ambassadors returned, he would needs know the cause of his repulse in that competition.
Davies on Ireland.
I perceive
Thy mortal sight to fail: objects divine
Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milt. P. Loff.
To say the principles of nature must needs be such as our philosophy makes them, is to set bounds to omnipotence.
Glanville, Scipio, c. 25.
I have affairs below,
Which I must needs dispatch before I go. Dryden.
NEEDY. adj. [from need.] Poor; necessitous; distressed by poverty.
Their gates to all were open evermore,
And one sat waiting ever them before,
To call in comers by, that needy were and poor. Fa. 2.
— In his needy shop a tortoise hung,

An alligator stuff'd, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fittes. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
The poor and needy praise thy name. Pf. lxix. 21.
We bring into the world a poor needy uncertain life, float at the longest, and unquiet at the best. Temple.
Nuptials of form, of interest, or of state,
Thou'st feeds of pride are fruitful in debate:
Let happy men for gen'rous love declare,
And chuse the needy virgin, chaste and fair. Grave.
To relieve the needy, and comfort the afflicted, are duties that fall in our way every day. Addison's Spect. N.º 93.
NE'ER. [for never.]
It appears I am no horse,
That I can argue and discourse;
Have but two legs, and ne'er a tail. Hudibras.
To NEESE. v. n. [nisse, Danish; niesen, Dutch.] To sneeze; to discharge flatulencies by the nose. Retained in Scotland.
He went up and stretched himself upon him; and the child neesed seven times, and opened his eyes. 2 Kings iv. 35.
By his neesings a light doth shine, and his eyes are like the eye-lids of the morning. Jab xli. 18.
NE'F. n. f. [old French, from nave.] The body of a church.
The church of St. Justina, deluged by Palladio, is the most handsome, luminous, disencumbered building in Italy.
The long nef consists of a row of five cupola's, the cross one has on each side a single cupola deeper than the others.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.
NEFA'RIOUS. adj. [nefarious, Latin.] Wicked; abominable.
The most nefarious bastards, are they whom the law files incestuous bastards, which are begotten between ascendants and descendants, and between collateral, as far as the divine prohibition extends. Ayliffe's Peregrin.
NEGATION. n. f. [negatio, Lat. negation, Fr.]
1. Denial; the contrary to affirmation.
Chance properly signifies, that all events called casual, among inanimate bodies, are mechanically and naturally produced according to the determinate figures, textures, and motions of those bodies, with this only negation, that those inanimate bodies are not conscious of their own operations.
Beattie.
Our assertions and negations should be yea and nay, for whatsoever is more than these is fin. Rogers, Ser. 9.
2. Description by negative.
Negation is the absence of that which does not naturally belong to the thing we are speaking of, or which has no right, obligation, or necessity to be present with it; as when we say a stone is inanimate, or blind, or deaf. Watts's Logic.
NE'GATIVE. adj. [negativus, Fr. negativus, Latin.]
1. Denying; contrary to affirmative.
2. Implying only the absence of something.
There is another way of denying Christ with our mouths, which is negative, when we do not acknowledge and confess him. South's Sermon.
Consider the necessary connection that is between the ne- gative and positive part of our duty. Tillotson, Ser. 1.
3. Having the power to withhold, though not to compel.
Denying me any power of a negative voice as king, they are not ashamed to seek to deprive me of the liberty of using my reason with a good conscience. King Charles.
NE'GATIVE. n. f.
1. A proposition by which something is denied.
Of negatives we have far the least certainty; and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.
Tillotson, Ser. 1.
2. A particle of denial; as, not.
A purer substance is defin'd,
But by an heap of negatives combin'd;
Asks what a spirit is, you'll hear them cry,
It hath no matter, no mortality. Cleveland's Poem.
NE'GATIVELY. adv. [from negative.]
1. With denial; in the form of denial; not affirmatively.
When I asked him whether he had not drunk at all? he answered negatively. Boyle.
2. In form of speech implying the absence of something.
The fathers draw arguments from the Scripture negatively in reproof of that which is evil; Scriptures teach it not.
I shall shew what this image of God in man is, negatively, by shewing wherein it does not consist; and positively, by shewing wherein it does. South's Ser.
To NE'GLECT. v. a. [neglegitius, Latin.]
1. To omit by carelessness.
If he neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church.
Mat. xviii. 17.
2. To treat with scornful heedlessness.
3. To postpone.
I have been long a sleeper; but I trust
My absence doth neglect no great design,
Which by my presence might have been concluded. Sha.
NE'GLECT. n. f. [neglegitius, Latin.]
1. Instance of inattention.
2. Careless treatment; scornful inattention. I have

NEG

I have perceived a most faint neglect of late, which I have rather blamed as my own jealous curiosity, than as a very pretence or purpose of unkindness. Shakef. King Lear.
3. Negligence; frequency of neglect.
Age breeds neglect in all, and actions
Remote in time, like objects
Remote in place, are not beheld at half their greatness. Denham.
4. State of being unregarded.
Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect,
With virgin honours let my herie be deck'd,
And decent emblem. Prior.
NEGLE'CTER. n. f. [from neglect.] One who neglects.
NEGLE'CTFUL. adj. [neglect and full.]
NE'GLECTLESS; careless; inattentive.
Moral ideas not offering themselves to the senses, but being to be framed to the understanding, people are neglectful of a faculty they are apt to think wants nothing. Locke.
Though the Romans had no great genius for trade, yet they were not entirely neglectful of it. Arbutn. on Coins.
2. Treating with indifference.
If the father cares them when they do well, shew a cold and neglectful countenance to them upon doing ill, it will make them sensible of the difference. Locke on Education.
NEGLE'CTION. n. f. [from neglect.] The state of being negligent.
NEGLE'CTFULLY. adv. [from neglectful.] With heedless in-attention; careless indifference.
Sleeping neglectful doth betray to loss
The conquests of our fierce cold conqueror. Shakef.
NEGLE'CTIVE. adj. [from neglect.] Inattentive, or regardless of.
I wanted not probabilities sufficient to raise jealousies in any king's heart, not wholly stupid, and neglective of the publick peace. King Charles.
NEG'LIGENCE. n. f. [negligence, Fr. negligentia, Latin.]
1. Habit of omitting by heedlessness, or of acting carelessly.
2. Instance of neglect.
She let it drop by negligence,
And, to th'advantage, I being here, took't up. Shakef.
NE'GLIGENT. adj. [negligent, Fr. negligens, Latin.]
1. Careless; heedless; habitually inattentive.
My sons, be not now negligent; for the Lord hath chosen you to stand before him. 2 Chron. xxix. 11.
2. Careless of any particular.
We have been negligent in not hearing his voice. Bar. i. 19.
3. Scornfully regardless.
Let stubborn pride possess thee long,
And be thou negligent of fame;
With ev'ry muse to grace thy song,
May'st thou despise a poet's name. Swift's Miscel.
NE'GLIGENTLY. adv. [from negligent.]
1. Carelessly; heedlessly; without exactness.
Infels have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; and whereas some of the ancients have said that their motion is indeterminate, and their imagination indefinite, it is negligently observed; for one go right forwards to their hills, and bees know the way to their hives. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame.
In both our English genius is express'd, Lofly and bold, but negligently dress'd. Waller.
In comely figure rang'd my jewels shone,
Or negligently plac'd for thee alone. Prior.
2. With scornful inattention.
To NEGO'TIATE. v. n. [negociar, French; from negotium, Latin.] To have intercourse of business; to traffick; to treat.
Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
She was a busy negotiating woman, and in her withdrawing chamber had the fortunate conspiracy for the king against Richard been hatched. Bacon's Hen. VII.
It is a common error in negotiating; whereas men have many reasons to persuade, they strive to use them all at once, which weakeneth them.
A steward to embezzle those goods he undertakes to manage; an ambassador to betray his prince for whom he should negotiate; are crimes that double their malignity from the quality of the actors. Decay of Piety.
I can discover none of these frequent intercourses and negotiations, unless that Luther negotiated with a black boar.
Atterbury.
NEGOTIA'TION. n. f. [negociation, Fr. from negotiate.] Treaty of business.
Oil is slow, smooth, and solid; so are Spaniards observed to be in their motion: Though it be a question yet unresolved, whether their affected gravity and slowness in their negotia- tions have tended more to their prejudice or advantage. How- played to treat with others.
NEGOTIA'TOR. n. f. [negociator, Fr. from negotiate.] One employed to treat with others.
Those who have defended the proceedings of our negotia- tors at Gertnydenburg, dwell much upon their zeal in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands; but say nothing to justify those demands. Swift.

NEGO'TIATING. adj. [from negotiate.] Employed in negotiation.
NE'GRO. n. f. [Spanish; negre, Fr.] A blackmoore.
Negrees transplanted into cold and flegmatic habitations;
continue their hue in themselves and their generations. Brown.
NEIF. n. f. [niff, Islandick; neef, Scottish.] Fift.
Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif. Shakef. Hen. IV. p. ii.
To NEIGH. v. n. [hnægan, Saxon; neger, Dutch.] To utter the voice of a horse or mare.
Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud. Sha.
They were as fed horses, every one neighed. Jer. v. 8.
Run up the ridges of the rocks again;
And with shrill neighings fill the neighbouring plain. Dry.
The gen'rous horse, that nobly wild,
Neighs on the hills, and dares the angry lion. Smith.
NEIGH. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of an horse.
It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage. Sha.
NEIGHBOUR. n. f. [nehybbyr, Saxon.]
1. One who lives near to another.
He sent such an addition of foot, as he could draw out of Oxford and the neighbour garisons. Clarendon.
2. One who lives in familiarity with another; a word of civility.
Masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,
Will you undo yourselves? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
3. Any thing next or near.
This man shall let me packing;
I'll lug the guts into the neighbour room. Shakespeare.
4. Intimate; confidant.
The deep revolving witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbour to my counsels. Shakef.
5. [In divinity.] One partaking of the same nature, and therefore entitled to good offices.
The Gospel allows no such term as a stranger; makes every man my neighbour. Spratt's Sermons.
NEIGHBOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To adjoin to; to confine on.
The strawberry grows underneath the nettle;
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baler quality. Shakef. Hen. V.
Give me thy hand,
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
These grow on the leisurely ascending hills, that neighbour
the shore. Sandy's Journey.
Things nigh equivalent and neighbouring value,
By lot are parted. Anon.
2. To acquaint with; to make near to.
That being of so young days brought up with him,
And since so neighbour'd to his youth and 'haviour. Sha.
NEIGHBOURHOOD. n. f. [from neighbour.]
1. Place adjoining.
I could not bear
To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,
But flew in all the haste of love to find thee. Add. Cato.
2. State of being near each other.
Consider several states in a neighbourhood; in order to preserve peace between these states, it is necessary they should be formed into a balance. Swift.
3. Those that live within reach of communication.
NEIGHBOURLY. adj. [from neighbour.] Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.
The Scottish lord, hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay when he was able. Shakef. Merch. of Ven.
He steals away my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return; judge you if this be neighbourly dealing.
Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
NEIGHBOURLY. adv. [from neighbour.] With social civility.
NEITHER. conjunct. [næden, Saxon, neither.]
1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor.
Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king. Kings xxii. 31.
2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.
Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it. Gen. iii. 3.
3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and often, though not very grammatically, yet emphatically,
after another negative.
If it be thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard; we see that lightnings and coruscations, near at hand, yield no sound neither. Bacon.
Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, 'till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither.
Locke.
NEI'THER.

NER

NEITHER, pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleo.
Which of them shall I take?

Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd
If both remain alive. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him:

Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
Who fav'd my life and honour, but praise neither. Dryd.
Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither. Locke.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother; but independent of each other. Locke.

NEOPHYTE, n. f. [neophyte, Fr. ne and phye.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEOTERIC, adj. [neoteric, Latin.] Modern; novel; late.
We are not to be guided either by the misreports of some ancients, or the capricious of one or two neoterics. Greuv.

NEP, n. f. [nepe, Lat.] An herb.
NEPENTHE, n. f. [nepe and nepe.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
Lull'd with the sweet nepe of a court;
There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
Once break their rest nor stir them from their place. Pope.

NEPHEW, n. f. [nepos, Latin; neveu, French.]
1. The son of a brother or sister.

Immortal offspring of my brother Jove;
My brightest nephew and whom best I love. Dryden.
I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power,
The grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother? Locke.

2. The grandson. Out of use.
With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly enough signify, after that my grand-father Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgment, he propos'd also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom.

Her fire at length is kind,
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.
All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd. Fairy 2.

NEPHRETIC, adj. [nephretic, Fr.]
1. Belonging to the organs of urine.

2. Troubled with the stone.
The diet of nephretic persons ought to be such as is opposite to the alkaline nature of the salts in his blood.

3. Good against the stone.
The nephretic stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green;
but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow. Woodw. Mett. Foss.

NEPOTISM, n. f. [nepotisme, French; nepos, Latin.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendor; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families. Addison on Italy.

NERVE, n. f. [nervus, Latin; nerf, Fr.] The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood-vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglion or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare;
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for sinew or tendon.
Strong Tharymed discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerves in two. Pope's Odyss.

NEVELESS, adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.
There sunk Thalia, neveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Satire held her head. Dunciad, b. iv.

NEVVOUS, adj. [nervosus, Latin.] Well strung; strong; vigorous.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.
Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheney.

NEVVY, adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

NET

Death, that dark spirit, in his net, arm doth lie,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die. Sh.

NESCIENCE, n. f. [from nescire, Latin.] Ignorance; the state of not knowing.

Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages, have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience. Glewo. Scyll. c. ii.

NESH, adj. [nepe, Saxon.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Sh.
Ness.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality; as, poisonous, poisonousness;
turbid, turbidness; lowly, lowliness; from myre, Saxon.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nepe, Saxon; a nose of land, or headland; as INVERNESS.

NEST, n. f. [nepe, Saxon.]
1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young. Dent. xxii. 6.

2. Any place where animals are produced.
Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Dentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shaksf.
A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

Boxes or drawers; little pockets or conveniences.
To NEST, v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nestled within his leaves. Howell's Vocal Persif.

NESTEGG, n. f. [nest and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for shew,
Like nesteggs, to make clients lay. Hudibras.

To NESTLE, v. n. [from nest.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle till greater succours came.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horfes. L'Estrange.

The king's sifter wents commonly by the water-side, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Fluttering there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strowed with several plants, amongst which the snails nestle all the winter. Addison on Italy.

Mark where the fly directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too nigh;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in your passing by. Swift's Miscell.

To NESTLE, v. a.
1. To house, as in a nest.

That labour'd yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hovering here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.

Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestled in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.
This Ithacus, so highly is endeared
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother, nestles him. Chapman's Iliad.

NESTLING, n. f. [from nestle.] A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET, n. f. [netis, Gothic; net, Saxon.] A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'd'st never fear the net, nor time,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He made nets of chequer-work for the chapters, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings vii. 17.

Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble. Taylor's Holy Living.

The vegetative tribes,
Wrapt in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomson.

NETHER, adj. [neoter, Saxon; nedre, Dutch.] It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we see the netter part, but never say this part is netter than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems complicit in the word nebent. Nether is not now much in use.

1. Lower; not upper.

NEV

No man shall take the netter or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Dent. xxiv. 6.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and netter great lip. Peasam.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way
Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my netter shape thus grew Transform'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The upper part thereof was whey, Hudibras, p. i.
The netter, orange mix'd with grey.

A beauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her netter parts. Roscommen.

As if great Atlas from his height,
Shou'd sink beneath his heavily weight,
And with a mighty fawn, the flaming wall Shou'd gaze inanimate, and rushing down o'erwhelm this netter ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first tubline in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the netter world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.
This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our netter crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Numbness were those bad angels, seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of hills,
Twixt upper, netter, and surrounding fires. Milton.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.
No less desire
To found this netter empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

The gods with hate beheld the netter sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden's Zen.

NE' THERMOST, n. f. [super, of netter.] Lowest.
Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the netthermost hell. Psalm lxxvi. 13.

Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'rs,
Or spirits, of the netthermost abyss
Might in that noise reside. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very netthermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him. South's Sermons.

Heracles tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex netthermost. Keilaga. Bur.

NE' TTING, n. f. A reticulated piece of work.
NE' T TLE, n. f. [netel, Saxon.] A stinging herb well known.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in an empaleme; but these are barren; for the embryos are produced either on different plants, or on different parts of the same plant, without any visible flower, which becomes a bivalve seed-vessel, sometimes gathered into round heads, and at other times small and hairy, incloding several seeds. Müller.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality. Shaksf. Hen. V.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish, grieve. Waller.

To NE' T TLE, v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate;
to provoke.

The princes were so netted at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estrange.

Although at every part of the Apostles discourse some of them might be uneasy and netted, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed. Bentley.

NE' TWORK, n. f. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the interstices.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship embos'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine;
Might in their dexter cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the fuciput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison's Spectator.

NEVER, adv. [ne ever, naepe, Saxon; ne æfre, not ever.]
1. At no time.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the left writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solec-ism; as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is, he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word among the best authors.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was never pleas'd. Prior.

NEU

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Gen. xxvii. 12.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transfusion throughout the whole body. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant within a mile of the town. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.
Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective.
Not any.

He answered him to never a word, inasmuch that the governour marvelled. Mont. xxvii. 14.

5. It is much used in composition; as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have never certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milton.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flowers;
Revive and raise themselves with moderate show'rs;
But over-charg'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays: Roscommen.

Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays,
Nor Linus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryden.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryd. Ovid.

Farewel, ye never-opening gates.
He to quench his drought to much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold to greedily purfild,
And be refresh'd with never-waiting food. Blackmore.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope's Dunci.

What the weak head with strongest bias rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd up front, thy starr'd grimace. Swift.

NE' VERTHELESS, adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.
They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker, b. iv.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart; nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South's Sermons.

NEUROLOGY, n. f. [νεῦρον and λόγος.] A description of the nerves.

NEUTOTOMY, n. f. [νεῦρον and τομή.] The anatomy of the nerves.

NEUTER, adj. [neuter, Latin; neutre, Fr.]
1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into whigs and Tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison's Traveller, N. 54.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.
The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion, but some state or condition of being; as, ides, I sit. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

NEUTER, n. f. One indifferent and unengaged.
The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison on the Christian Religion.

- NEU'TRAL, adj. [neutral, French.]
 1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.
 Who can be wife, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
 Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakespeare.
 He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon's Hen. VII.
 The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the War.
 2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.
 Some things good, and some things ill do seem,
 And neutral some, in her fantastic eye. Davies.
 3. Neither acid nor alkaline.
 Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbutnot.
NEU'TRAL, n. f. One who does not act nor engage on either side.
 The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. Bacon.
NEUTRALITY, n. f. [neutralité, French.]
 1. A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.
 Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of public danger, desert the common interest of their fellow-subjects.
Addison.
 The king, late griefs revolving in his mind,
 These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth's Ovid.
 All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the public is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.
 2. A state between good and evil.
 There is no health; physicians say, that we
 At best enjoy but a neutrality. Dante.
NEUTRALLY, adv. [from neutral] Indifferently; on neither part.
NEW, adj. [newyd, Welsh; neop, Saxon; neuf, Fr.]
 1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made or had; novel. It is used of things: as, young of persons.
 What's the newest grief?
 —That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
 Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.
 2. Modern; of the present time.
 Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple's Miscellanies.
 3. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.
 There names inter'd unnumber'd ages past,
 From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
 These ever new, nor subject to decays,
 Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.
 4. Not habituated; not familiar.
 Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will inflame their poison into new minds. Hooker, b. v.
 Seiz'd with wonder and delight,
 Gaz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight. Dryden.
 Twelve mules, a strong laborious race,
 New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace. Pope.
 5. Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.
 Men after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost
 new. Bacon's Natural History.
 6. Fresh after any thing.
 Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
 New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryden.
 7. Not of ancient extraction.
 A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.
NEW, adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.
 As soon as he had written them, a new swarm of thoughts flung her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-born letters both to death and burial. Sidney, b. ii.
 God hath not then left this to chafe that, neither would reject that to chafe this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.
 So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
 Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
 And often bounding on the bruised grass,
 As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Fairy 2.
 Who are the violets now
 That strow the green lap of the new-come spring. Shaksf.
 Your master's lines
 Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
 As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakespeare.
 Unfriendly, new-adopted to our hate,
 Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

- Take her or leave her? Shakspeare's King Lear.
 Left by a multitude
 The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out. Shak.
 Bow, stubborn knees; and heart with strings of steel
 Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe. Shaksf. Ham.
 Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
 And I a gasping, new-deliver'd mother,
 Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shak. R. II.
 I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
 And lasting fealty to the new-made king. Shak. R. II.
 He saw heav'n blossom with a new-born light,
 On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
 The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright
 The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;
 Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Cromwell.
 I've seen the morning's lovely ray
 Hover o'er the new-born day;
 With rosy wings to richly bright,
 As if he scorn'd to think of night,
 When a ruddy storm, whose fount
 Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
 Call'd for an untimely night
 To blot the newly blossom'd light. Cromwell.
 Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together fow'd,
 And girded on our loins, may cover round
 Those middle parts; that this new-come shame,
 There fit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milt. P. L.
 Their father's state,
 And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton's Parn.
 The new-created world, which came in heav'n Long had foretold. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 His evil
 Thou us'dst, and from thence createst more good,
 Witness this new-made world, another heav'n. Milton.
 All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
 As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair;
 All in that new-blown age which does inspire Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire. Cromwell.
 While from above adorn'd with radiant light,
 A new-born sun surpris'd the dazzled sight. Rymer.
 If it could, yet that it should always run them into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Ray on the Creation.
 This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
 Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
 Or Legim's counsel, her new-chosen mate. Dryden.
 When the flood in its own depths was drown'd,
 It left behind it false and slippery ground;
 And the more solemn pomp was still deferr'd,
 'Till new-born nature in fresh looks appear'd. Dryden.
 Shewn all at once you dazzled to our eyes,
 As new-born Pallas did the Gods surpris'd;
 When springing forth from Jove's new-cloving wound,
 She struck the warlike spear into the ground. Dryden.
 A bird new-made, about the banks she plies,
 Not far from shore, and short excursions tries. Dryden.
 Our house has sent to-day
 T'insure our new-built vessel, call'd a play. Dryden.
 'Twas early now to guests from whence arose,
 Her new-made union with her ancient foes. Dryden.
 Then curds and cream,
 And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
 Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.
 When pleading Matho, born abroad for air,
 With his fat paunch fills his new-fashioned chair. Dryden.
 A new-form'd faction does your power oppose,
 The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes. Dryden.
 If thou ken't from far
 Among the Pleiads a new-kindled star;
 If any sparkles than the rest more bright,
 'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.
 If we consider new-born children, we shall have little reason to think that they bring many ideas into the world with them. Locke.
 Drummers with yellom-thunder shake the pile,
 To greet the new-made bride. Gay's Trivia.
 Ah blouzelind! I love thee more by half,
 Than does their fawns; or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay's Trivia.
 The proctor exhibits his proxy from the dean and chapter, and presents the new-elected bishop to the vicar-general. Swift's Parergon.
 The new-fallen young here bleating for their dams,
 The larger here, and there the lesser lambs. Pope.
 A new-married man and an ass, are bride-led; an old-married man and a pack-horse, fudd-led. Arbutnot.

NEW

- Learn all the new-fashion words and oaths. Swift.
NEWFA'NGLED, adj. [new and fangle.] Formed with vain or foolish love of novelty.
 At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
 Than with a snow in May's newfangled shows; Shaksf.
 But like of each thing, that in season grows.
 Those charities are not newfangled devices of yesterday, but are most of them as old as the reformation. Athenaeum.
NEWFA'NGLEDNESS, n. f. [from newfangled.] Vain and NEWFA'NGLENESS, n. f. [from newfangled.] foolish love of novelty.
 So to newfangledness both of manner, apparel, and each thing else, by the custom of self-guilty evil, glad to change thing often for a worse. Sidney, b. ii.
 Yet he them in newfangledness did pass. Hubbard's Tale.
 The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in the newfangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter. Cromwell.
NEWELL, n. f.
 1. The compass round which the staircase is carried.
 Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair open newel, and finely railed in. Bacon, Essay 46.
 2. Newel; novelty. Spenser.
NEWING, n. f. [from new.] Yell or harm.
NEWLY, adv. [from new.] Freshly; lately.
 Such is the power of that sweet passion,
 That it all former mind doth newly fashion
 And the refined mind doth newly form. Spenser's Hymn on Love.
 Her breath indeed those hands have newly stopp'd. Shak.
 They newly learned by the king's example, that attenders do not interrupt the conveying of title to the crown. Bacon.
 Her lips were red, and one was thin,
 Compar'd to that was next her chin;
 Some bee had stung it newly. Suckling.
 Then rubb'd it o'er with newly gather'd mint. Dryden.
NEWNESS, n. f. [from new.] Freshness; lateness; novelty; recentness; state of being new.
 His device was to come without any device, all in white like a new knight, but so new as his newness shamed most of the others long exercise. Sidney, b. ii.
 Away, my friends, new flight;
 And happy newness that intends old right. Shakespeare.
 Words borrowed of antiquity do lend majesty to stile, they have the authority of years, and out of their intermission do win to themselves a kind of grace-like newness. B. John.
 Their stories, if they had been preserved, and what else was then performed in that newness of the world, there could nothing of more delight have been left to posterity.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 In these disturbances,
 And newness of a wav'ring government,
 T'avenge them of their former grievances. Don. C. War.
 Newness in great matters, was a worthy entertainment for a searching mind; it was an high taste, fit for the relish.
South's Sermon.
 There are some newnesses of English, translated from the beauties of modern tongues, as well as from the elegances of the latin; and here and there some old words are sprinkled, which for their significance and found, deserved not to be antiquated. Dryden's Den Segstian.
 When Horace writ his satyrs, the monarchy of his Caesar was in its newness, and the government but just made easy to his conquered people. Dryden's Juvenal.
NEWS, n. f. without the singular, [from new, newness, Fr.]
 1. Fresh account of any thing; something not heard before.
 As he was ready to be greatly advanced for some noble pieces of service which he did, he heard news of me. Sidney.
 When Rhea heard these news, she fled from her husband to her brother Saturn. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 Evil news rides fast, while good news baits. Milt. Agonist.
 With such amazement as weak mothers use,
 And frantic gesture, he receives the news. Waller.
 Now the books, and now the bells,
 And now our ad the preacher tells,
 To edify the people;
 All our divinity is news;
 And we have made of equal use
 The pulpit and the steeple. Denham.
 The amazing news of Charles at once was spread,
 At once the general voice declared
 Our gracious prince was dead. Dryden.
 It is no news for the weak and poor to be a prey to the strong and rich. L'Estrange.
 They have new-gatherers and intelligencers distributed into their several walks, who bring in their respective quotas, and make them acquainted with the discourse of the whole kingdom. Spektator, N. 439.
 2. Papers which give an account of the transactions of the present times.
 Their papers, filled with a different party spirit, divide the people into different sentiments, who generally consider ra-

- ther the principles than the truth of the news-writer. Addison.
 Advertise both in every news-paper; and let it not be your fault or mine, if our country-men will not take warning. Swift's Drapiers Letters.
 Wood is generally his own news-writer. I cannot but observe from that paragraph, that this public enemy treats this kingdom with contempt. Swift's Drapiers Letters.
 Pamphlets and news-papers have been full of me. Pope.
NEWS-MONGER, n. f. [news and monger.] One that deals in news; one whose employment it is to hear and to tell news.
 Many tales devis'd,
 Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,
 By smiling pick-thanks and base news-mongers. Shaksf.
 This was come as a judgement upon him for laying aside his father's will, and turning stock-jobber, news-monger, and busy body, meddling with other peoples affairs. Arbutnot.
NEWY, n. f. [from new.] A small lizard: they are supposed to be appropriated some to the land, and some to the water.
 Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
 Wherof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed,
 Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
 The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm. Shaksf.
 Newts and blind worms do no wrong;
 Come not near our fairy queen. Shak. M. Night's Dream.
 Such humidity is observed in newts and water-lizards, especially if their skins be perforated or pricked. Brown's P. Ery.
NEW-YEAR'S-GIFT, n. f. [new year, and gift.] Present made on the first day of the year.
 If I be served such a trick, I'll have my brains taken out and buttered, and give them to a dog for a new-year's-gift.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
 When he sat on the throne distributing new-year's-gifts, he had his altar of incense by him, that before they received gifts they might cast a little incense into the fire; which all good christians refused to do. Stillingfleet.
NEXT, adj. [next, Saxon, by a colloquial change from nept or nypt, the superlative of nep or nyb; neft, scottish.]
 1. Nearest in place; immediately succeeding in order.
 Want supplieth itself of what is next, and many times the next way. Bacon, Essay 14.
 The queen already fat
 High on a golden bed; her princely guest
 Was next her side, in order sat the rest. Dryden, Virg. En.
 The next in place and punishment were they,
 Who prodigally throw their souls away. Dryden, En. vi.
 2. Nearest in any gradation.
 If the king himself had stayed at London, or, which had been the next best, kept his court at York, and sent the army on their proper errand, his enemies had been speedily subdued. Clarendon.
 O fortunate young man! at least your lays
 Are next to his, and claim the second praise. Dryden.
 Finite and infinite, being by the mind looked on as modifications of expansion and duration, the next thing to be considered, is, how the mind comes by them. Locke.
 That's a difficulty next to impossible. Rowe.
NEXT, adv. At the time or turn immediately succeeding.
 Th' unwary nymph
 Desir'd of Jove, when next he fought her bed,
 To grant a certain gift. Addison's Ovid Metam. b. iii.
Ni'as, n. f. [niais, French.] Simple, silly, and foolish.
 A nias hawk is one taken newly from the nest, and not able to help itself; and hence nisey, a silly person. Bailey.
NIB, n. f. [neb, Saxon, the face; nebbe, Dutch, the bill.]
 1. The bill or beak of a bird. See Neb.
 2. The point of any thing, generally of a pen.
 A tree called the bejaco, which twines about other trees, with its end hanging downwards, travellers cut the nib off it, and presently a spout of water runs out from it as clear as crystal. Derham.
NIBBLED, adj. [from nib.] Having a nib.
TO NIBBLE, v. a. [from nib, the beak or mouth.]
 1. To bite by little at a time; to eat slowly.
 Thy turf mountains, where live nibbling sheep,
 And flat meads thatch'd with flower them to keep. Shak.
 It is the rose that bleeds, when he Nibbles his nice phlebotomy. Cleaveland's Poems.
 Had not he better have born wats nibbling of his plants and roots now, than the huntman's eating of him out of house and home. L'Estrange, Fable 387.
 Many there are who nibble without leave;
 But none, who are not born to taste, survive. Granvil.
 2. To bite as a fish does the bait.
 The roving trout
 Greedily sucks in the twining bait,
 And tugs and nibbles at the fallacious meat. Gay.
TO NIBBLE, v. n.
 1. To bite at.
 As pigeons bill, so wedlock would be nibbling. Shaksf.
 They

NIC

They gape at rich revenues which you hold,
And fain would nibble at your grandame gold. Dryden.
But if you would be nibbling, here is a hand to stay your stomach. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Plunging himself in mud, and then lifting up his head a little, he casts out the said string; which the little fishes taking for a worm, and nibbling at it, he immediately plucks them both in together. Grew's Museum.

2. To carp at; to find fault with.
Instead of returning a full answer to my book, he manifestly falls a nibbling at one single passage in it. Tillot. Pref.
NIBBLER. n. f. [from nibble.] One that bites by little at a time.
NICE. adj. [nepe, Saxon, soft.]
1. Accurate in judgment to minute exactness; superfluously exact. It is often used to express a culpable delicacy.
Such a man was Argalus, as hardly the nicest eye can find a spot in. Sidney.
He that stands upon a slippery place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up. Sha. K. John.
Nor be so nice in taste myself to know,
If what I swallow be a truth or no. Dryd. Persus.
Thus critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact, but nice,
Form short ideas, and offend in arts,
As most in manners, by a love to parts. Pope on Crit.
Produce'd his plays, and begg'd the knight's advice. Pope.
2. Delicate; scrupulously and minutely cautious.
The letter was not nice, but full of charge
Of dear import. Shaksf. Romeo and Juliet.
Dear love! continue nice and chaste;
For if you yield, you do me wrong;
Let duller wits to love's end haste,
I have enough to woo thee long. Donne.
Of honour men at first like women nice,
Raise maiden scruples at unpractis'd vice. E. Hallifax.
Having been compiled by Gratian, in an ignorant age, we ought not to be too nice in examining it. Baker.
3. Fastidious; squeamish.
God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights,
As may compare with heaven; and to taste,
Think not I shall be nice. Milt. Par. Lost.
4. Easily injured; delicate.
With how much ease is a young muse betray'd?
How nice the reputation of the maid?
5. Formed with minute exactness.
Indulge me but in love, my other passions Shall rise and fall by virtue's nice rules. Addison's Cato.
6. Requiring scrupulous exactness.
Supposing an injury done, it is a nice point to proportion the reparation to the degree of the indignity. L'Estrange.
My progress in making this nice and troublesome experiment, I have set down more at large. Newton's Opt.
7. Refined.
A nice and subtle happiness I see Thou thyself proposest, in the choice
Of thy associates, Adam; and wilt taste
No pleasure, tho' in pleasure solitary. Milt. P. Lost.
8. Having lucky hits. This signification is not in use.
When my hours
Were nice and lucky, men did random lives
Of me for jeffs. Shaksf. Ant. and Cleopatra.
NICELY. adv. [from nice.]
1. Accurately; minutely; scrupulously.
These kind of knives in this plainness
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakspeare's K. Lear.
What mean those ladies which, as tho'
They were to take a clock to pieces, go
So nicely about the bride? Donne.
He ought to study the grammar of his own tongue, that he may understand his own country speech nicely, and speak it properly. Locke.
The next thing of which the doses ought to be nicely determined, are opiates. Arbutnot on Cains.
At nicely carving shew thy wit;
But ne'er presume to eat a bit. Swift's Miscell.
2. Delicately.
The inconveniences attending the best of governments, we quickly feel, and are nicely sensible of the share that we bear in them. Atterbury.
NICESS. n. f. [from nice.]
1. Accuracy; minute exactness.
Where's now that labour'd niceness in thy dress,
And all those arts that did the spark express. Dryden.
2. Superfluous delicacy or exactness.
A strange niceness were it in me to refrain that from the ears of a person representing so much worthiness, which I am glad even to rocks and woods to utter. Sidney.

NIC

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames,
Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryden.
Nor place them where Roast crabs offend the niceness of their nose. Dryden.
NICEITY. n. f. [from nice.]
1. Minute accuracy of thought.
Nor was this nicety of his judgment confined only to literature, but was the same in all other parts of art. Prior.
2. Accurate performance.
As for the workmanship of the old Roman pillars, the ancients have not kept to the nicety of proportion and the rules of art so much as the moderns. Addison on Italy.
3. Fastidious delicacy; squeamishness.
He them with speeches meet
Does fair intreat; no courting nicety,
But simple true, and eke unfeigned sweet. Fairy Q. Shaksf.
So love doth loath disdainful nicety.
4. Minute observation; punctilious discrimination; subtilty.
If reputation attend these conquests, which depend on the fineness and niceties of words, it is no wonder if the wit of men so employed, should perplex and subtilize the signification of sounds. Locke.
His conclusions are not built upon any niceties, or subtilty and uncommon appearances, but on the most simple and obvious circumstances of these terrestrial bodies. Woodward.
5. Delicate management; cautious treatment.
Love such nicety requires,
One blast will put out all his fires. Swift's Poem.
6. Effeminate softness.
7. Niceties, in the plural, is generally applied to dainties or delicacies in eating.
NICHAS. n. f.
The characters are: it hath a polypetulous or a monope-talous flower, cut very deeply into several segments, but is almost of an anomalous figure; from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, beset all over with prickles, in which are contained one or two round hard seeds.
NICH. n. f. [French.] A hollow in which a statue may be placed.
Niches, containing figures of white stone or marble, should not be coloured in their concavity too black. Warton.
They not from temples, nor from gods refrain,
But the poor lares from the niches seize,
If they be little images that please. Dryden.
On the fourth a long majestic race
Of Egypt's priests, the gilded niches grace. Pope.
The heirs to titles and large estates are well enough qualified to read pamphlets against religion and high-flying; whereby they fill their niches, and carry themselves through the world with that dignity which best becomes a female and a figure. Swift's Miscellany.
NICK. n. f. [nick, Teutonic, the twinkling of an eye.]
1. Exact point of time at which there is necessity or convenience.
That great instrument of state had foreknowledge of it, but suffered the fatal thread to be spun out to that length for some politick respects, and then to cut it off in the very nick. Hewel's Local Poetry.
What in our watches that in us is found,
So to the height and nick we up be wound,
No matter by what hand or trick. Swelling.
That trick,
Had it come in the nick,
Had touch'd us to the quick.
Though dame fortune seem to smile,
And leer upon him for a while,
She'll after shew him in the nick.
Of all his glories a dog trick. Hudibras, p. i. cont. 3.
And some with symbols, signs, and tricks,
Engraved in planetary nicks,
With their own influences will fetch them Down from their orbs, arrest and catch them. Hud.
This nick of time is the critical occasion for the gain of L'Estrange.
2. A notch cut in any thing. [Corrupted from neck or notch.]
3. A score; a reckoning.
Launce his man told me, he lov'd her art of all nick. Shak.
4. A winning throw. [nick, Fr. a ludicrous trick.]
Come, seven's the main,
Cries Gaumede; the usual trick
Seven, shut a fix, eleven a nick. Prior.
To NICK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To hit; to touch luckily; to perform by some slight artifice used at the lucky moment.
Is not the winding up of wittels
A nicking more than half the bus'ness? Hudibras, p. ii.
The just season of doing things must be nick'd, and all accidents improved. L'Estrange's Fable 38.
Take away passion while it is predominant and about, and just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may certainly over-rule it. Sidney.
2. To cut in nicks or notches. His

NIG

His beard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;
And ever as it blaz'd they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair.
My master preaches patience, and the while His man with scissars nicks him like a fool. Shakspeare.
Breaks watchmen's heads, and chairmen's ghailes,
And thence proceeds to nicking fishes. Prior.
3. To suit, as tallies cut in nicks.
Words nicking and resembling one another, are applicable to different significations. Candori's Remains.
4. To defeat or cozen, as at dice; to disappoint by some trick or unexpected turn.
Why should he follow you?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship, at such a point. Shakspeare.
NICKNAME. n. f. [from de nique, French.] A name given in scold or contempt; a term of derision; an opprobrious or contemptuous appellation.
The time was when men were had in price for learning;
now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if he were a contemptible nickname. Ben. Jonson.
My mortal enemy hath not only falsely furnished me to be a feigned person, giving me nicknames, but also hath offered large sums of money to corrupt the princes with whom I have been retained. Bacon's Hen. VII.
So long as her tongue was at liberty, there was not a word to be got from her, but the same nickname in derision.
L'Estrange.
To NICKNAME. v. a. To call by an opprobrious appellation.
You nickname virtue vice;
For virtue's office never breaks men's troth. Shaksf.
Let's seem these facts which treasons nickname force,
Than such a fear'd ability for more. Denham.
To NICKNAME. v. a. [nick, Latin.] To wink.
There are several parts peculiar to brutes, which are wanting in man; as the seventh or suspensory muscle of the eye, the nictating membrane, and the strong aponeurosis on the sides of the neck. Ray.
NIDE. n. f. [nides, Lat.] A brood: as, a nide of pheasants.
NIDIG. n. f. [corrupted from niding or niding.] The opprobrious term with which the man was anciently branded who refused to come to the royal standard in times of exigency. A coward; a dastard.
There was one true English word of greater force than them all, now out of all use; it signifieth no more than abject, blemished, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Camden.
NIDIFICATION. n. f. [nidificatio, Latin.] The act of building nests.
That place, and that method of nidification, doth abundantly answer the creature's occasions. Derham.
NIDING. adj. [from nide, Saxon, vileness.]
Niding, an old English word signifying abject, base-minded, false-hearted, coward, or nidget. Carew.
NIDROUS. adj. [nidroius, from nidor.] Resembling the smell or taste of roasted fat.
Incense and nidorous smells, such as of sacrifices, were thought to intoxicate the brain, and to dispose men to devotion; which they may do by a kind of contrition of the spirits, and partly also by heating and exalting them. Bac.
The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations either with the taste of the aliment, acid, nidrois, or fetid, resembling the taste of rotten eggs.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
NIDROUSITY. n. f. [from nidroius.] Eructation with the taste of undigested food-meat.
The cure of this nidroisity is, by vomiting and purging.
NIDULATION. n. f. [nidulatio, Latin.] The time of remaining in the nest.
The ground of this popular practice might be the common opinion concerning the virtue prognostic of these birds, the natural regard they have unto the winds, and they unto them again, more especially remarkable in the time of their nidulation, and bringing forth their young. Brown's V. Err.
NICE. n. f. [nices, nipes, French; nepes, Latin.] The daughter of a brother or sister.
My nice Plantagenet,
Led in the hand of her kind aunt of Gloster. Sha. R. III.
While he thus his nice betwixt
About our life he builds a wall. Waller.
NIGGARD. n. f. [nigger, flandrick.] A miser; a curmudgeon; a sordid, avaricious, parsimonious fellow.
If thou do, then let thy bed be turned from fine gravel to weeds or mud. If thou dost, let some unjust niggards make wrecks to spoil thy beauty.
Be not a niggard of your speech. Shaksf. Macbeth.
Serve him as a grudging master,
As a penurious niggard of his wealth. Milton's Poem.
Be niggards of advice on no pretence;
For the worst avarice is that of sense. Pope on Crit.
NIGGARD. adj.
1. Sordid; avaricious; parsimonious.

NIG

One she found
With all the gifts of bounteous nature crown'd,
Of gentle blood; but one whole niggard fate
Had set him far below her high estate. Dryden.
2. Sparing; wary.
Most free of question, but to our demands
Niggard in his reply. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
To NIGGARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To limit.
The deep of night is crept upon our talk,
And nature must obey necessity;
Which we will niggard with a little rest. Shakspeare.
NIGGARDISH. adj. [from niggard.] Having some disposition to avarice.
NIGGARDLINESS. n. f. [from niggardly.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.
Niggardliness is not good husbandry, nor generosity, profusion. Addison's Spectator, N. 443.
NIGGARDLY. adj. [from niggard.]
1. Avaricious; sordidly parsimonious.
Where the owner of the house will be bountiful, it is not for the steward to be niggardly. Hall.
Love is like a penurious god, very niggardly of his opportunities: he must be watched like a hard-hearted treasurer.
Dryden's Spanish Prior.
Why are we to niggardly to stop at one fifth? Why do we not raise it one full moiety, and thereby double our money?
Locke.
Providence not niggardly but wife,
Here lavishly bestows, and there denies,
That by each other's virtues we may rise. Granville.
Tiberius was noted for his niggardly temper; he used only to give to his attendants their diet. Arbutnot on Cains.
2. Sparing; wary.
I know your mind, and I will satisfy it; neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no farther than the bounds of the question. Sidney.
NIGGARDLY. adv. Sparingly; parsimoniously.
I have long loved her, followed her, ingross'd opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion that could but niggardly give me fight of her. Shaksf. M. W. of Windsor.
NIGGARDNESS. n. f. [from niggard.] Avarice; sordid parsimony.
All preparations, both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so fluttish a vice. Sidney.
NIGH. prep. [nyh, Saxon.] At no great distance from.
They thone
Stars distant, but nigh hand seem'd other worlds. Milton.
Nigh this recess, with terror they survey,
Where death maintains his dread tyrannic sway. Garth.
NIGH. adv.
1. Not at a great distance.
The day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand. Jo. ii. 1.
He was sick nigh unto death. Phil. ii. 27.
2. To a place near.
He drew nigh, and to me held,
Ev'n to my mouth, of that same fruit held part
Which he had pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
I will defer that anxious thought,
And death, by fear, shall not be nigher brought. Dryd.
NIGH. adj.
1. Near; not distant; not remote.
The loud tumult shews the battle nigh. Prior.
2. Allied closely by blood.
He committed the protection of his son Afanes to two of his nigh kinsmen and assured friends. Knolles.
His uncle or uncle's son, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family, may redeem him. Lev. xxv. 49.
His sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him. Lev. xxi. 3.
To NIGH. v. n. [from the particle.] To approach; to advance; to draw near.
Now day is done, and night is nighing fast. Hubbard.
NIGHLY. adv. [from nigh the adjective.] Nearly; within a little.
A man born blind, now adult, was taught by his touch to distinguish between a cube and a sphere of the same metal, and nighly of the same bigness. Locke.
NIGHNESS. n. f. [from nigh.] Nearness; proximity.
NIGHT. n. f. [from nigh.] Nearness; proximity.
1. The time of darkness; the time from sun-set to sun-rise.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutcheffs, will be here this night. Shakspeare's K. Lear.
In the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night divide the spoil. Gen. xlix. 27.
Pharaoh rose up in the night.
They did eat and drink, and carried all night. Exodus xii. 30.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
'Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn,
Then the curtains will be drawn;
And they waken with that light,
Whole day shall never sleep in night. Craspare, Dire

NIG

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryd.
2. It is much used in composition.
To-NIGHT. adverbially. In this night; at this night.
There came men in hither to-night of the children of Israel, to search out the country. Jos. ii. 2.
NIGHTBRAWLER. n. f. [night and brawler.] One who raises disturbances in the night.
You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-brawler. Shaksp. Othello.
NIGHTCAP. n. f. [night and cap.] A cap worn in bed, or in undress.
The rattlement houted, and clapt their chopt hands, and threw up their twenty night-caps. Shaksp. Jul. Caesar.
Great mountains have a perception of the disposition of the air to tempests sooner than the valleys below; and therefore they lay in Wales, when certain hills have their night-caps on, they mean mischief. Bacon's Nat. History.
How did the humbled swain detest
His prickly beard, and hairy breast!
His night-cap border'd round with lace,
Could give no softness to his face. Swift's Poems.
NIGHTCROW. n. f. [night and crow.] A bird that cries in the night.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil figu;
The night-crow cry'd, a boding luckless time. Shaksp.
NIGHTDEW. n. f. [night and dew.] Dew that wets the ground in the night.
All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead,
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head;
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flowers beneath the night-dew sweat;
Even lust and envy sleep. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.
NIGHTDOG. n. f. [night and dog.] A dog that hunts in the night. Used by deer-stealers.
When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased. Sha.
NIGHTDRESS. n. f. [night and dress.] The dress worn at night.
The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease. Pope.
NIGHTED. adj. [from night.] Darkened; clouded; black.
It was great ignorance, Gloucester's eyes being out,
To let him live: Edmund, I think, is gone;
In pity of his misery to dispatch
His nighted life. Shaksp. King Lear.
Good Hamlet, cast thy nighted colour off,
And let thine eye look like a friend on Denmark. Sha.
NIGHTFARING. n. f. [night and fare.] Travelling in the night.
Will-a-Wisp misleads night-faring clowns,
O'er hills, and sinking bogs, and pathless downs. Gay.
NIGHTFIRE. n. f. [night and fire.] Ignis futurus; Will-a-Wisp.
Foolish night-fires, womens and childrens wishes,
Chafes in arras, gilded empynes:
These are the pleasures here. Herbert.
NIGHTFLY. n. f. [night and fly.] Moth that flies in the night.
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoaky cribs,
And hush't with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shaksp. Lear.
NIGHTFINDER. n. f. [from night and finder.] Lost or distressed in the night.
Either some one like us night-finder here,
Or else some neighbour woodman, or at worst,
Some roving robber calling to his fellows. Milton.
NIGHTGOWN. n. f. [night and gown.] A loose gown used for an undress.
Since his majesty went into the field,
I have seen her rise from her bed, throw
Her night-gown upon her. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They have put me in a full night-gown, and a gaudy fool's cap. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 113.
No meagre mule-rid mope, adult and thin,
In a dun night-gown of his own loose skin. Pope's Dunciad.
NIGHTHAG. n. f. [night and hag.] Witch supposed to wander in the night.
Nor uglier follows the night-hag, when called
In secret, riding through the air the cones
Lur'd with the smell of infant-blood, to dance
With Lapland witches. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
NIGHTINGALE. n. f. [from night and gale, Saxo., to sing; gale, Teutonic, is a sound or echo.]
1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; Philomel.
I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,

When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shaksp. As You Like It.
Although the wezon, throte, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation; and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown's P. Err.
Thus the wife nightingale that leaves her home,
Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
To foreign groves does her old musick bring. Walker.
2. A word of endearment.
My nightingale!
We'll beat them to their beds. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
NIGHTLY. adv. [from night.]
1. By night.
Thee, Sion! and the flow'ry brooks beneath,
That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I visit. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
Soon as the evening shades prevail,
The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
And nightly to the listening earth
Repeats the story of her birth. Addison's Spectator.
2. Every night.
Let all things suffer,
Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shaksp. Macbeth.
NIGHTLY. adj. [from night.] Done by night; acting by night; happening by night.
May the stars and shining moon attend
Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel. Dryd.
I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Psalms lxiii. 6.
Two swains, whom love kept wakeful and the muse, Pour'd o'er the whitening vale their sleepy care. Pope.
NIGHTMAN. n. f. [night and man.] One who carries away or buries the dead.
NIGHTMARE. n. f. [night, and according to Temple, mara, a spirit that, in the heathen myth logy, was related to torment or suffocate sleepers.] A morbid oppression in the night, resembling the pressure of weight upon the breast.
Saint Withold footed thrice the wold,
He met the night-mare, and her name he told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shaksp. K. Lear.
The forerunners of an apoplexy are, dulness, drowsiness, vertiges, tremblings, oppressions in sleep, and night-mares. Arbutnot on Aliments.
NIGHTPIECE. n. f. [night and piece.] A picture so coloured as to be supposed seen by candle light; not by the light of the day.
He hung a great part of the wall with night-pieces, that seemed to show themselves by the candles which were lighted up; and were so inflamed by the sun-shine which fell upon them, that I could scarce forbear crying out fire. Addison.
NIGHTRAIL. n. f. [night and reil, Saxo., a gown or robe.] A loose cover thrown over the dress at night.
An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or night-rail; but will talk as gravely as a father of the church on the vita and peplus. Addison on ancient Modis.
NIGHTRAVEN. n. f. [night and raven.] A bird supposed of ill omen, that cries loud in the night.
The ill-fact owl, death's dreadful messenger,
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful drear. Spenser.
I pray his bad voice bode no mischief:
I had as lief have heard the night-raven,
Come what plague would have come after it. Shaksp.
NIGHTROBBER. n. f. [night and robber.] One who steals in the dark.
Highways should be fenced on both sides, whereby thieves and night-robbers might be more easily pursued and executed. Spenser's Ireland.
NIGHTRULE. n. f. [night and rule.] A tumult in the night.
How now, mad spirits,
What night-rule now about this haunted grove? Shaksp.
NIGHTSHADE. n. f. [night shade, Saxo.]
1. A plant of two kinds, common and deadly night-shade.
The flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into five parts, and expands in form of a star: from the flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a round, oval, soft, succulent fruit, containing many flat seeds in each. The species are nine. This the physicians have directed to be used in medicine, under the title of Jolanum bartenje. Miller.
2. Deadly night-shade (belladonna) a plant. The flower is bell-shaped, of one leaf, divided into five acute segments at the top, and succeeded by a globular soft fruit, divided into two cells which contain the seeds. It is a very strong poison.
NIGHTSHINING. n. f. [night and shine.] Shewing brightness in the night. Nor.

None of these noctilua, or night-flying bodies, have been observed in any of the ancient sepulchres. Wilkin's Dædalus.
NIGHTSHRIEK. n. f. [night and shriek.] A cry in the night.
I have almost forgot the taste of tears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek, and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir,
As life were in't. Shaksp. Macbeth.
NIGHTTRIPPING. n. f. [night and trip.] Going lightly in the night.
Could it be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had exchange'd
In cradle cloaths, our children where they lay,
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shaksp.
NIGHTWALK. n. f. [night and walk.] Walk in the night.
If in his night-walk he met with irregular scholars, he took their names, and a promise to appear, unfitt for, next morning. Walton's Life of Sanderson.
NIGHTWALKER. n. f. [night and walk.] One who roves in the night upon ill designs.
Men that hunt so, be either privy stealers, or night-walkers. Aitcham's Schoolmaster.
NIGHTWARBLING. [night and warble.] Singing in the night.
Now is the pleasant time,
The cool, the silent, fave where silence yields
To the night-warbling bird. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
NIGHTWARD. adj. [night and ward.] Approaching towards night.
Their night-ward studies, wherewith they close the day's work. Milton on Education.
NIGHTWATCH. n. f. [night and watch.] A period of the night as distinguished by change of the watch.
I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Psalms lxiii. 6.
NIGRESCENT. adj. [nigrescent, Latin.] Growing black; approaching to blackness.
NIGRIFICATION. n. f. [niger and facio.] The act of making black.
NIMBLITY. n. f. [nimblity, Fr. nimble, Latin.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing.
Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded; and this we call pure nimblity, or mere nothing. Watts's Logic.
To NIM. v. a. [from ne will, nillan, Saxo.] Not to will; to refuse; to reject.
Certes, said he, I will thine offer'd grace,
Ne to be made so happy do intend.
Another bliss before mine eyes I place,
Another happiness, another end. Spenser's Fairy Q.
In all affections the concurrent still;
If now, with man and wife to will and nill
The self-same things, a note of concord be,
I know no couple better can agree. Ben. Jonson.
NIM. n. f. The shining sparks of brains in trying and melting the ore.
To NIM. v. a. [nimen, Dutch, to take.] To take. In cant, to steal.
They'll question Mars, and by his look Detect who 'twas that nim'd a cloak. Hudibras, p. i.
They could not keep themselves hence of their fingers, but would be nimning something or other for the love of thieving. L'Estrange, Fable 241.
NIMBLE. adj. [from nim, or numan, Saxo., tractable.] Quick; active; ready; speedy; lively; expeditious.
They being nimble-jointed than the rest,
And more industrious, gathered more store. Spenser.
You nimble lightnings, dart your blinding flames Into her fearful eyes. Shaksp. King Lear.
You have dancing shoes
With nimble soles. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heaven,
Consum'd with nimble glance and grateful steam;
The others not, for his was not sincere. Milt. P. Lost.
Thro' the mid seas the nimble pinnace sails,
Aloof from Crete before the northern gales. Pope.
NIMBLENESS. n. f. [from nimble.] Quickness; activity; speed; agility; readiness; dexterity; celerity; expedition; swiftness.
The hounds were freight uncoupled, and ere long the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.
Himself shewing at one instant both steadiness and nimbleness. Sidney, b. ii.
All things are therefore partakers of God; they are his offspring, his influence is in them, and the personal wisdom of God is for that very cause said to excel in nimbleness or agility, to pierce into all intellectual, pure and subtle spirits, to go through all, and to reach unto every thing which is. Hooker, b. v. f. 5.
We, lying still,
Are full of rest, defence and nimbleness. Shaksp.
Ovid ranged over all Parnassus with great nimbleness and agility; but as he did not much care for the toil requisite to climb the upper part of the hill, he was generally roving about the bottom. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 115.

NIP

NIMBLEWITTED. adj. [nimble and witty.] Quick; eager to speak.
Sir Nicholas Bacon, when a certain nimble-witted counsellor at the bar, who was forward to speak, did interrupt him often, said unto him, There is a great difference betwixt you and me; a pain to me to speak, and a pain to you to hold your peace. Bacon, Apophth. 124.
NIMBLY. adv. [from nimble.] Quickly; speedily; actively.
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious playing of a lute. Sha. Rich. III.
The air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself.
Most legs can nimbly run, tho' some be lame. Davies.
The liquor we poured from the crystals, and set it in a digesting furnace to evaporate more nimbly. Boyle.
NIMBLESS. n. f. Nimbleness. Spenser.
NIMMIETY. n. f. [nimietas, school Latin.] The state of being too much.
NIMMER. n. f. [from nim.] A thief; a pilferer.
NINCOMPPOOP. n. f. [A corruption of the Latin non compos.] A fool; a trifter.
An old ninnyhammer, a dotard, a nincompoop, is the best language she can afford me. Addison.
NINE. n. f. [nium, Gothick; nigon, Saxo.] One more than eight; one less than ten.
The weyward sisters,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine. Shaksp. Macbeth.
A thousand scruples may startle at first, and yet in conclusion prove but a nine-days wonder. L'Estrange.
The faults are nine in ten owing to affectation, and not to the want of understanding. Swift's Miscell.
NINEFOLD. n. f. [nine and fold.] Nine times; any thing nine times repeated.
This huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to deavour, immures us round ninefold. Milt.
NINEPENNY. n. f. [nine and penny.] A silver coin valued at nine-pence.
Three silver pennies, and a nine-pence bent. Gay's Post.
NINEPINS. n. f. [nine and pin.] A play where nine pieces of wood are set up on the ground to be thrown down by a bowl.
A painter made blossoms upon the trees in December, and school-boys playing at nine-pins upon the ice in July. Peacock on Drawing.
For as when merchants break, o'orthrown
Like nine-pins, they strike others down. Had. p. ii.
NINESCORE. adj. [nine and score.] Nine times twenty.
Eugenius has two hundred pounds a year; but never values himself above nine-score, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 177.
NINETEEN. adj. [nigontyne, Saxo.] Nine and ten; one less than twenty.
Nineteen in twenty of perplexing words might be changed into easy ones, such as occur to ordinary men. Swift.
NINETEENTH. adj. [nigonteoða, Saxo.] The ordinal of nineteen; the ninth after the tenth.
In the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzaradan. 2 Kings xxv. 8.
NINETEEN. adj. [nigontyne, Saxo.] Nine times ten.
Enos lived ninety years and begat Cainan. Gen. v. 9.
NINTH. adj. [negota, Saxo.] That which precedes the tenth; the first after the eighth; the ordinal of nine.
Upon a strict observation of many, I have not found any that see the ninth day.
NINTIETH. adj. [nigontneogota, Saxo.] The ordinal of ninety; the tenth nine times told.
NINNY. n. f. [ninus, a child, Spanis.] A fool; a simpleton.
What a pied ninny's this?
The dean was so shabby, and look'd like a ninny,
That the captain suppos'd he was curate. Swift.
NINNYHAMMER. n. f. [from ninny.] A simpleton.
Another vents her passion in scurrilous terms; an old ninnyhammer, a dotard, a nincompoop, is the best language she can afford me. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 109.
Have you no more manners than to rail at Hocus, that has faved that clod-pated, numskull'd, ninnyhammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbutnot on John Bull.
To NIP. v. a. [nijpen, Dutch.]
1. To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth.
In oranges and lemons, the nipping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N<sup>o</sup>. 388.
2. To cut off by any slight means.
The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nipt off. Mortimer's Husband.
3. To blast; to destroy before full growth.
This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth

NIT

The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root;
And then he falls as I do. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

A flower doth spread and dye,
Thou would'st extend me to some good,
Before I were by frost's extremity *nip*t in the bud. Herb.
His delivery now proves

Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring,
*Nip*t with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milton.

Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Ad.
From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this great work, had it not been *nip*t in the bud. Arbutnot's John Bull.

4. To pinch as frost.
The air bites frostwardly, it is very cold. —
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
When blood is *nip*t, and ways be foul,
Then nighty fings the staring owl. Sba. Love's L. Left.

5. To vex; to bite.
And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops off blood thence like a well did play. Fairy Q.

6. To satirize; to ridicule; to taunt farcally.
But the right gentle mind would bite his lip.
To hear the javel to good men to nip. Hubbard's Tale.

Quick wits commonly he in desire new-fangled; in purpose unconstant; bold with any person; busy in every matter; footing such as be present, nipping any that is absent.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

NIP, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.
I am sharply taunted, yea, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

2. A small cut.
What this a fleece? 'tis like a demicannon;
What up and down car'd like an apple-tart?
Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and flish, and flath,
Like to a canter in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

3. A blast.
So hasty fruits and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwifery of ripening show'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from th' unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth. Stepney.

4. A taunt; a farcical.
NIPPER, n. f. [from nip.] A satirist. Out of use.
Ready backbiters, fore nippers, and spiteful reporters privily of good men. Ascham.

NIPPER, n. f. [from nip.] Small piners.
NIPPERING, adv. [from nip.] With bitter farcical.
NIPPLE, n. f. [nipple, Saxon.]

1. The teat; the dug; that which the sucking young take into their mouths.
Tho' tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me. —
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums. Shakespeare.

In creatures that nourish their young with milk, are adapted the nipples of the breast to the mouth and organs of suction. Ray on the Creation.

2. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated.
In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag. Derham's Physica Theol.

NIPPLEWORT, n. f. [Lampiana.] A very common weed.
NISI PRIUS, n. f.

[In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is pannelled, and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the case of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talea locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius, differ. So that justices of nisi prius, must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him. Coat.

NIT, n. f. [pneu, Saxon.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bomblyous noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair. Derham's Physica Theol.

NITENCY, n. f. [nitentia, Latin.]
1. Lustre; clear brightness.

NIT

2. [From the Latin, nitens.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward will be augmented; that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open.

NITING, n. f. A coward, dastard, poltroon.
NITID, adj. [nitidus, Latin.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth. Boyle on Colours.

NITRE, n. f. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Latin.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acid and bitterish taste, impressing a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earths, stones, and other solid substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores; it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. That this salt should be found on the surface of walls is not wonderful, since it is found only on or near the surface of the earth where it is produced.

The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. From this marl the salt is separated by water; but the crystals into which it shoots, as we receive them from the East-Indies, are small, imperfect, and impure. Earths of whatever kind, moistened by the dung and excrement of animals, frequently afford ni- tre in large quantities. The earths at the bottom of pigeon-houses, and those of stables and cow-houses, all afford ni- tre, on being thrown into water and boiled. In France, where very little nitre is imported, they make it from the rubbish of old mortar and plaster of buildings; and the mortar of old walls with us, if moistened with urine and exposed to the air in a proper situation that is open to the north east, and covered over to defend it from wet, never fails to afford nitre in a few weeks, and that in proportion of one tenth of the weight of the ingredients. There is no question but a manufacture of nitre might be established in England to as much advantage as that of France. The place where the materials are exposed, is to be carefully examined. It must be moderate as to the great points of moisture and dryness;
if there be too much moisture the nitre which is already formed will be washed away, and without some moisture the salts will hardly be ever formed. Heat and coldness, unless excessive, can be of no consequence. It is on account of the requisiteness of so certain a degree of moisture to the materials from which nitre is obtained, that the north east winds are of so much use in the production of it. In spring and autumn, which are the seasons when this salt is principally made, these two winds are neither too moist nor too dry, especially in the night; the fourth and west winds are destructive, because they bring storms and showers. In medicine, nitre is cooling and diuretic, and good in burning fevers. The natrum or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not.
It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spongy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. It is of an acid taste, like pot-ashes. About Smyrna and Ephesus, and through a great part of Asia Minor, this salt is extremely frequent on the surface of the earth, and also in Sindhy, a province of the inner Asia, where they sweep it up and call it soap-earth, using a solution or lye of it in washing. The natrum or ni- tre of the ancients, has been by some supposed to be a salt of substance, and by others to be the same with our nitre or substance, but both these opinions are erroneous, this salt being the true natrum of the ancients, answering perfectly to its description, and having all its uses and virtues. In scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an absterive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt but not with salt-petre, as do many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Foss.

Some tumultuous cloud, Milton.
Instant with fire and nitre, hurried him,
Some steep their feed, and some in cauldrons boil. Dryden.

With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil.
NITROUS, adj. [nitreus, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

NOB

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather a nitrous fumes more than either of them have severally.

Bacon's Natural History.
The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unweildy bulk with due celerity. Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find,
Meet stores of cold so greedily purfu'd, Blackmore.
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food.

NITRY, adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.
Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind. Gay.

NITTLY, adv. [from nitry.] Louisly.
One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nitily needy, and therefore adventurous. Howard.

NITTY, adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.
NITVAL, adj. [nitellus, Latin.] Abounding with snow. Diſt.

NITVEOUS, adj. [nitivus, Latin.] Snowy; resembling snow.
Cinnabar becomes red by the acid exhalation of sulphur, which otherways presents a pure and nitveous white. Brown.

NITV, n. f. A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.
NO, adv. [na, Saxon.]

1. The word of refusal.
Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no, woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast. Shakespeare.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be exprest.
In ruder years and honest kerly men. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.

If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no. Calamy's Sermon.

2. The word of denial opposite to concession or affirmation.
I think it would not fort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.
My name's Macbeth: —
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear. —
—No, nor more fearful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

This hand shall combat on the crooked shore;
No, let the Grecian pow'rs oppress in fight, Unquitt'd perish in their tyrant's light. Dryden's Homer.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.
So glorious is, or boasts so many dics, Waller.

NO, adj.
1. Not any; none.
Let their be no strife between me and thee. Gen. xiii. 8.

Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

2. It forms an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where.
When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel. 1 Sam. x. 14.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine. Dryden.

3. No one; none; not any one.
No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity. Snodgrass's Sermon.

TO NOBILITATE, v. a. [nobilitas, Latin.] To ennoble; to make noble.

NOBILITY, n. f. [nobilitas, Latin.]
1. Antiquity of family joined with splendour.
When I took up Boccace unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood, and titles, in the story of Sigismunda. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

Long galleries of ancestors,
Challenge, nor wonder, or esteem from me,
"Virtue alone is true nobility." Dryden.

2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns.
Nobility in England is extended to five ranks; duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.

3. The persons of high rank; the persons who are exalted above the commons.

To curb the will of the nobility. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though the hated Amphilus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and the desired he might be pardoned that youthful error; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney, b. ii.

But ah, my muse, I would thou hadst facility
To work my goddesses so by thy invention,
On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility. Sidney.

NOB

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shakespeare's Othello.

They thought it great their foreign to controul,
And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.

NOBLE, adj. [noble, Fr. nobilis, Latin.]
1. Of an ancient and splendid family.

2. Exalted to a rank above commonality.
From virtue first began,
The difference that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

3. Great; worthy; illustrious.
Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 Mac. vi. 31.

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Milton.

Timorous.
A noble stroke he lifted high,
Which hung not, but with tempest fell. Milt.

Those two great things that engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

4. Exalted; elevated; sublime.
My share in pale Pyrene I resign,
And claim no part in all the mighty nine:
Statues, with winding ivy crown'd belong
To nobler poets, for a nobler song. Dryden.

5. Magnificent; stately; as, a noble parade.
6. Free; generous; liberal.

7. Principal; capital; as, the heart is one of the noble parts of the body.

NOBLE, n. f.
1. One of high rank.
Upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand. Ex. xxiv. 11.

How many nobles then should hold their places,
That must strike fail to spirits of vile fort! Shakespeare.

What the nobles once said in parliament, Nolumus leges Angliae mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people. Bacon.

The nobles amongst the Romans took special care in their last wills, that they might have a lamp in their monuments.
Wilkins's Math. Magic.

See all our nobles begging to be slaves,
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope, Dial. i.

It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expense of time or study. Swift's Modern Education.

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority:
these easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.

2. A coin rated at six shillings and eight-pence; the sum of six and eight-pence. Camden's Remains.

Shortly after he coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold.

Many fair promotions
Are daily given, to ennoble those
That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakespeare.

Upon every writ procured for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble, that is six shillings and eight-pence, is, and usually hath been paid to fine. Bacon.

NOBLE liverwort, [Hepatica.] A plant.

The characters are: the root is fibrose and perennial:
the leaf consists of three lobes on a pedicel, which arises from the root; as does the pedicel of the flower, which is naked and single: the cup of the flower is, for the most part, composed of one leaf sometimes cut into three or four deep divisions: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is globular, consisting of one single cell curved. Miller.

NOBLEMAN, n. f. [noble and man.] One who is ennobled.
If I bluth,

It is to fee a nobleman want manners: Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.
The nobleman is he, whose noble mind
Is fill'd with inborn worth. Dryden's Wife of Bath.

NOBLENESS, n. f. [from noble.]
1. Greatness; worth; dignity; magnanimity.

The nobleness of life
Is to do this; when such a mutual pair,
And such a twain can do't. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Any thing
That my ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose, Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakespeare.
He that does as well in private between God and his own soul, as in public, hath given himself a good testimony that his purposes are full of honesty, nobleness, and integrity.
Taylor's Holy Living.

Great-

NOC

Greatness of mind, and nobleness, their seat Build in her loveliest. Milton's Par. Lost.
There is not only a congruity herein between the nobleness of the faculty and the object, but also the faculty is enriched and advanced by the worth of the object. Hale.
You have not only been careful of my fortune, which was the effect of your nobleness, but you have been solicitous of my reputation, which is that of your kindness. Dryden.
2. Splendour of descent; lustre of pedigree.
Noblesse. n. f. [noblesse, French.]
1. Nobility. This word is not now used in any sense.
Fair branch of nobles, flower of chivalry,
That with your worth the world amazed make. Fairy Q.
2. Dignity; greatness.
Thou whose nobles keeps one stature still,
And one true posture, tho' besieged with ill. Ben. Johnson.
3. Noblemen collectively.
Let us haste to hear it,
And call the nobles to the audience. Shakespeare. Ham.
I know no reason we should give that advantage to the commonalty of England to be foremost in brave actions, which the nobles of France would never suffer in their peafants. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.
NOBLE. adv. [from noble.]
1. Of ancient and splendid extraction.
Only a second laurel did adorn
His Colleague Catulus, tho' nobly born;
He had the pride of the triumphal bay,
But Minus won the glory of the day. Dryden.
2. Greatly; illustriously; magnanimously.
Did he not freight the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done?
This fate he could have 'cap'd, but would not lose Honour for life; but rather nobly chose Death from their fears, than safety from his own. Donham.
3. Grandly; splendidly.
There could not have been a more magnificent design than that of Trajan's pillar. Where could an emperor's ashes have been so nobly lodged, as in the midst of his metropolis, and on the top of so exalted a monument. Addison on Italy.
NOBODY. n. f. [no and body.] No one; not any one.
This is the tune of our catch plaid by the picture of nobody.
It fell to secretary Coke's turn, for whom nobody cared, to be made the sacrifice; and he was put out of his office. Clarendon, b. ii.
If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you on your own laughter, you may condemn their taste, and appeal to better judgments; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift's Miscel.
NOCENT. adj. [nocent, Latin.]
1. Guilty; criminal.
The earl of Devonshire being interested in the blood of York, that was rather feared than nocent; yet as one, that might be the object of others plots, remained prisoner in the Tower during the king's life. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. Hurtful; mischievous.
His head, well-stor'd with subtle wiles:
Not yet in horrid shade, or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb,
Fearless uncar'd he slept. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.
They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its nocent qualities. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
NOCK. n. f. [nackbia, Italian.]
1. A slit; a nick; a notch.
2. The fundament. Let fesset.
When the date of nock was out,
Off dropt the sympathetic snout. Hudibras.
NOCTAMBULO. n. f. [nox and ambulo, Latin.] One who walks in his sleep.
Respiration being carried on in sleep, is no argument against its being voluntary. What shall we say of noctambul's? There are voluntary motions carried on without thought, to avoid pain. Arbutnot on Air.
NOCTIDIAL. adj. [noctis and dies.] Comprising a night and a day.
The noctidial day, the lunar periodic month, and the solar year, are natural and universal; but incommensurate each to another, and difficult to be reconciled. Diét.
NOCTIFEROUS. adj. [nox and fero.] Bringing night.
NOCTIVAGANT. adj. [noctivagus, Latin.] Wandering in the night.
NOCTURNAL. n. f. [from noctis, Latin.] An account of what passes by night.
I have got a parcel of visions and other miscellanies in my noctuary, which I shall send you to enrich your paper. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 586.

NOD

NOCTURN. n. f. [nocturne, Fr. nocturnus, Latin.] An office of devotion performed in the night.
The reliques being conveniently placed before the church-door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them, and the nocturn and the mattins for the honour of the saints whose the reliques are. Stillington.
NOCTURNAL. adj. [nocturnus, Latin.] Nightly.
From gilded roofs depending lamps display
Nocturnal beams, that emulate the day. Dryden.
I beg leave to make you a present of a dream, which may serve to lull your readers 'till such time as you yourself shall gratify the public with any of your nocturnal discoveries. Add.
NOCTURNAL. n. f. An instrument by which observations are made in the night.
That projection of the stars which includes all the stars in our horizon, and therefore reaches to the thirty-eight degree and a half of southern latitude, though its centre is the north pole, gives us a better view of the heavenly bodies as they appear every night to us; and it may serve for a nocturnal, and shew the true hour of the night. Watts.
To NOD. v. n. [Of uncertain derivation: noia, Gr. noia, Lat. noctuidia, Welsh.]
1. To decline the head with a quick motion.
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts;
Your enemies with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Cleopatra hath nodded him to her. Shakespeare's A. and Cleop.
On the faith of Jove rely,
When nodding to thy suit he bows the sky. Dryden.
2. To pay a slight bow.
Cassius must bend his body.
If Caesar carelessly but nod on him. Shakespeare's Jul. Caesar.
3. To bend downwards with quick motion.
When a pine is hewn on the plains,
And the last mortal stroke alone remains,
Lab'ring in pangs of death, and threatening all,
This way and that the nod, considering where to fall. Dryden's Ovid, b. x.
He climbs the mountain rocks,
Fir'd by the nodding verdure of its brow. Thompson's Spring.
4. To be drowsy.
Your two predecessors were famous for their dreams and visions, and contrary to all other authors, never pleased their readers more than when they were nodding. Add. Guard.
NOD. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick declination of the head.
Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things; a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss. Locke on Education.
A mighty king I am, an earthly God;
Nations obey my word, and wait my nod:
And life or death depend on my decree. Prior.
2. A quick declination.
Like a drunken sailor on a mast,
Ready with every nod to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep. Shakespeare's R. III.
3. The motion of the head in drowsiness.
Every drowsy nod shakes their doctrine who teach, that the soul is always thinking. Locke.
4. A slight obeisance.
Will he give you the nod? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Since the wisdom of their choice is rather to leave my eye than my heart, I will practise the infirmity of nod, and be off to them most counterfeitedly. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
NODATION. n. f. [from nodo.] The state of being knotted, or act of making knots.
NODDER. n. f. [from nod.] One who makes nods.
A set of nodders, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to strangle all other offspring of wit in their birth. Pope.
NODDLE. n. f. [Dnol, Saxon.] A head; in contempt.
Her care shall be
To comb your noddle with a three-legg'd stool. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Let our wines without mixture, or stain, be all fine,
Or call up the matter and break his dull noddle. B. John.
My head's not made of brass,
As friar Bacon's noddle was. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. i.
He would not have it laid before the people, that images are to be worshipped with Latins, but rather the contrary, because the distinctions necessary to defend it are too subtle for their noddles.
Come, master, I have a project in my noddle, that shall bring my mistress to you back again, with as good will as ever she went from you.
Why shouldst thou try to hide thyself in youth?
Impartial Proserpine beholds the truth;
And laughing at so fond and vain a talk,
Will strip thy hoary noddle of its mask.
Thou that art ever half the city's grace,
And add'st to solemn noddles, solemn peace,
No dder. n. f. [from nod, French.] A simpleton; an idiot.

NOI

The whole race of bawling, fluttering noddies, by what tide soever dignified, are a-kin to the ass in this fable. L'Estrange, Fable 150.
NODE. n. f. [nodus, Latin.]
1. A knot; a knob.
2. A swelling on the bone.
If nodes be the cause of the pain, foment with spirit of wine wherein opium and saffron have been dissolved. Wise's Surgery.
3. Interfection.
All these variations are finished in nineteen years, nearly agreeing with the course of the nodes; i. e. the points in the ecliptic where the moon crosseth that circle as she passeth to her northern or southern latitude; which nodes are called the head and tail of the dragon. Holder.
NODOSITY. n. f. [from nodus, Latin.] Complication; knot.
These the milwife cutteth off, contriving them into a knot close unto the body of the infant; from whence enaeth that tortuosity, or complicated nodosity we call the navel. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. v.
NODIOUS. adj. [nodiosus, Latin.] Knotty; full of knots.
This is a skin affected with the gout, and when that becometh nodious, men continue not long after. Brown's P. Err.
NODULE. n. f. [nodulus, Latin.] A small lump.
Those minerals in the strata, are either found in grains, or else they are massed into balls, lumps, or nodules: which nodules are either of an irregular figure, or of a figure somewhat more regular. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
NODGEE. adj. Hard; rough; harsh.
He put on a hard, coarse, nodgy shirt of pendrel. Escape of King Charles.
NODGIE. n. f. [nodgie, German.] A small mug.
All this while Frog laughed in his sleeve, gave the esquire the other nodgie of brandy, and clapped him on the back. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
NOIANCE. n. f. [See ANNOIANCE.] Mischievous; inconvenience.
To borrow to-day, and to-morrow to mis, For lender and borrower noiante it is. Taff. Hugb.
The single and peculiar life is bound, With all the strength and armour of the mind, To keep itself from noiante. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
To NOIE. v. a. To annoy. An old word diffused.
Let servant be ready with maddock in hand, To flush out the bushes that noieth the land. Taff. Hugb.
NOIER. n. f. [from noie.] One who annoys. An old word in disuse.
The north is a noier to grass of all fruits,
The east a destroyer to herbs and all fruits. Taff. Hugb.
NOIOUS. adj. [noisus, Italian.] Hurtful; mischievous; troublesome; inconvenient. Obsolete.
Being bred in a hot country, they found much hair on their faces to be noious unto them. Spenser.
The false Duella leaving noious night,
Return'd to stately palace of dame Pride. Fairy Q.
But neither darkness foul, nor filthy bands,
Nor noious smell his purpose could withhold. Fairy Q.
NOISE. n. f. [noise, French.]
1. Any kind of sound.
Noises, as of waters falling down, founded about them, and sad visions appeared unto them. Wisd. xvii. 4.
Whether it were a whistling sound, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, these things made them swoon. Wisd. xvii. 18.
Great motions in nature pass without sound or noise. The heavens turn about in a most rapid motion, without noise to us perceived; though in some dreams they have been said to make an excellent music. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Shakes your hearts, while thro' the idle they hear
A lading noise, as horrid and as loud
As thunder makes, before it breaks the cloud. Waller.
2. Outcry; clamour; boasting or importunate talk.
What noise have we had about transposition of diseases, and transfusion of blood. Baker on Learning.
3. Occasion of talk.
Socrates lived in Athens during the great plague, which has made so much noise through all ages, and never caught the least infection. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 195.
To NOISE. v. n. [from the noun.] To found loud.
Harm
Those terrors, which thou speak'st of, did me none;
Tho' noising loud and threatening nigh. Milt. P. Reg.
To NOISE. v. a. To spread by rumour, or report.
All these sayings were noised abroad throughout all the hill country. Luke i. 65.
I shall not need to relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince's being there had been quickly noised. Watton.
They might buzz and whisper it one to another; and tacitly with-drawing from the presence of the apottle, they then lift up their voices and noised it about the city. Bentley.

NOM

NOISEFUL. adj. [noise and full.] Loud; clamorous.
That eunuch, guardian of rich Holland's trade,
Whose noiseful valour does no foe invade,
And weak assistance will his friends destroy. Dryden.
NOISELESS. adj. [from noise.] Silent; without sound.
On our quick-foot decrees,
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.
So noiseless would I live, such death to find,
Like timely fruit, not shaken by the wind,
But ripely dropping from the leafless bough. Dryden.
NOISINESS. n. f. [from noise.] Loudness of sound; importunity of clamour.
NOISEMAKER. n. f. [noise and maker.] Clamourer.
The office of all this noise is, the making of the noise-masters fill more ridiculous. L'Estrange.
NOISOME. adj. [noisus, Italian.]
1. Noxious; mischievous; unwholesome.
In case it may be proved, that among the number of rites and orders common unto both, there are particulars, the use whereof is utterly unlawful in regard of some special bad and noisome quality; there is no doubt but we ought to relinquish such rites and orders, what freedom soever we have to retain the other still.
All my plants I save from nightly ill
Of noisome winds, and blasting vapours chill.
Gravilla noisome from the neighb'ring fen,
And his own Care sent three hundred men. Milton.
The noisome pestilence, that in open war
Terrible, marches thro' the mid-day air,
And scatters death. Prior.
2. Offensive; disgusting.
The seeing these effects, will be Both noisome and infectious. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
The brake and the cockle are noisome too much. Tuff.
Foul words are but foul wind, and foul wind is but foul breath, and foul breath is noisome. Shakespeare's M. Ad. Ab.
The filthiness of his smell was noisome to all his army. 2 Mac. ix. 9.
An error in the judgment, is like an impostem in the head, which is always noisome, and frequently mortal. South.
NOISOMELY. adv. [from noisome.] With a foetid stench; with an infectious steam.
NOISOMENESS. n. f. [from noisome.] Aptness to disgust; offensiveness.
If he must needs be seen, with all his filth and noisomeness about him, he promises himself however, that it will be some ally to his reproach, to be but one of many to march in a troop. South's Serm.
NOISY. adj. [from noise.]
1. Sounding loud.
2. Clamorous; turbulent.
O leave the noisy town, O come and see
Our country cottis, and live content with me! Dryden.
To noisy fools a grave attention lend. Smith.
Although he employs his talents wholly in his closet, he is sure to raise the hatred of the noisy crowd. Swift.
NOLL. n. f. [Dnol, Saxon.] A head; a noddle.
An ass's noll I fixed on his head. Shakespeare.
NOLI me tangere. [Latin.]
1. Kind of cancerous swelling, exasperated by applications.
2. A plant.
Noli me tangere may be planted among your flowers, for the rarity of it. Admirer's Hugb.
NOLITIO. n. f. [nolitis, Latin.] Unwillingness; opposed to volition.
The proper acts of the will are, volition, nolition, choice, resolution, and command, in relation to subordinate faculties. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
NOMANCY. n. f. [nomanie, Fr. noimen, Latin; and noimancie, Greek.] The art of divining the fates of persons by the letters that form their names. Diét.
NOMANES. n. f. The entrails of a deer.
NOMENCLATOR. n. f. [Lat. nomenclator, Fr.] One who calls things or persons by their proper names.
There were a set of men in old Rome called nomenclators; that is, men who could call every man by his name. Addison's Guardian, N<sup>o</sup>. 107.
Are envy, pride, avarice, and ambition, such ill nomenclators that they cannot furnish appellations for their owners? Swift.
NOMENCLATURE. n. f. [nomenclatura, Fr. nomenclatura, Lat.]
1. The act of naming.
To say where notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, is but a shift of ignorance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. A vocabulary; a dictionary.
The watry plantations fall not under that nomenclature of Adam, which unto terrestrial animals assigned a name appropriate unto their natures. Brown's P. Err.
NOMINAL. adj. [nominalis, Latin.] Referring to names rather than to things; not real; titular.

NON

Profound in all the nominal,
And real ways beyond them all.
The nominal essence of gold is that complex idea the word gold stands for; as a body yellow, of a certain weight, malleable, fusible and fixed. But the real essence is the constitution of the insensible parts of that body on which those qualities depend. Locke.
Were these people as anxious for the doctrines essential to the church of England, as they are for the nominal distinction of adhering to its interests. Addison.
NOMINALLY. adv. [from nominal.] By name; with regard to a name; titularly.
To NOMINATE. v. a. [from nominare, Latin.]
1. To name; to mention by name.
Suddenly to nominate them all,
It is impossible. Shakesp. Henry VI. p. iii.
One lady, I may civilly spare to nominate, for her sex's fate, whom he termed the spider of the court. Watson.
2. To entitle.
Arcad, old father, why of late
Didst thou beight me born of English blood, Whom all a fairy's son doen nominate. Fairy Q.
3. To set down; to appoint by name.
If you repay me not on such a day, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off. Shakesp. Lear.
Never having intended, never designed any heir in that sense, we cannot expect he should nominate or appoint any person to it. Locke.
NOMINATION. n. f. [from nominare, Fr. from nominare.]
1. The act mentioning by name.
The forty-one immediate electors of the duke, must be all of several families, and of them twenty-five at least concur to this nomination. Watson's D. of Venice.
2. The power of appointing.
The nomination of persons to places, being so principal and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.
In England the king has the nomination of an archbishop; and after such nominations, he sends a congé d'elire to the dean and chapter, to elect the person thus elected by him.
NOMINATIVE. [in grammar, nominatif, Fr.] The case that primarily designates the name of any thing, and is called right, in opposition to the other cases called oblique.
NON. v. a. [Latin.] Not. It is never used separately, but sometimes prefixed to words with a negative power.
Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
And I partly know the instrument
That screws me from my true place in your favour;
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still. Shakesp.
A mere inclination to matters of duty, men reckon a willing of that thing; when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of what the law requires? South.
For an account at large of bishop Sanderson's last judgment concerning God's concurrence, or non-concurrence with the actions of men, and the positive entity of sins of commission, I refer you to his letters. Pierce.
The third sort of agreement or disagreement in our ideas, which the perception of the mind is employed about, is coexistence, or non-existence in the same subject. Locke.
It is not a non-act, which introduces a custom, a custom being a common usage. Locke.
In the imperial chamber this answer is not admitted, viz.
I do not believe it as the matter is alleged. And the reason of this non-admission is, because of its great uncertainty.
An apparitor came to the church, and informed the parson, that he must pay the tithes to such a man; and the bishop certified the ecclesiastical court under his seal on the non-payment of them, that he refused to pay them. Locke.
The non-appearance of persons to support the united sense of both houses of parliament, can never be construed as a general diffidence of being able to support the charge against the patent and patentee. Swift.
This may be accounted for by the turbulence of passions upon the various and surprising turns of good and evil fortunes, in a long evening at play; the mind being wholly taken up, and the consequence of non-attention so fatal. Swift.
NONAGE. n. f. [from non and age.] Minority; time of life before legal maturity.
In him there is a hope of government;
Which in his nonage, counsel under him,
And in his full and ripen'd years, himself shall govern well. Shakesp. Richard III.
Be love but there, let poor fear years
Be pos'd with the maturest fears Man trembles at, we straight shall find Love knows no nonage nor the mind. Croshaw.
We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that for which in truth is the world's nonage. Clarendon.

NON

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage, and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them. Hudibras, p. i.
After Chaucer there was a Spenser, a Harrington, a Flax-fax, before Waller and Denham were in being; and our numbers were in their nonage till these last appeared. Dryden.
In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.
NONCE. n. f. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from non or once; or from nun, German, need or use: Junius derives it less probably from nonce, to do for the nonce; being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.
I saw a wolf
Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones
In wanton dalliance the teat to crave,
While she her neck wreath'd from them for the nonce. Spem.
They used at first to fume the fish in a house built for the nonce. Carew.
When in your mention you are hot,
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him
A chalice for the nonce. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Such a light and metall'd dance,
Saw you never;
And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like grinde-stones. Ben. Jonson.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Clarendon.
Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once. Cotton.
NONCONFORMITY. n. f. [from non and conformity.]
1. Refusal of compliance.
The will of our maker, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it; a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines their actions to be morally good or evil. Watson's Logic.
2. Refusal to join in the established religion.
Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church, are so much struck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the grand pillar and buttress of nonconformity. South's Sermons.
The lady will plead the toleration which allows her nonconformity in this particular. Addison's Spectator.
NONCONFORMIST. n. f. [from non and conformist.] One who refuses to join in the established worship.
On his death-bed he declared himself a non-conformist, and had a fanatic preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.
NONE. adj. [No one, none, no one, Saxon.]
1. Not one.
Ye shall see when none pursueth you. Levi. xxvi. 17.
That fowl which is none of the lightest, can easily move itself up and down in the air without stirring its wings. Will.
Another, which is none of the least advantages of hope is, its great efficacy in preserving us from letting too high a value on present enjoyments. Addison's Spectator.
2. Not any.
Six days shall ye gather it, but on the sabbath there shall be none. Exodus xvi. 26.
Thy life shall hang in doubt, and shalt have none assurance of this life. Deuter. xxii. 66.
Before the deluge, the air was calm; none of those tu-multuary motions of vapours, which the mountains and winds cause in ours. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
The most glaring and notorious passages, are none of the finest. Fenton on the Cliffs.
3. Not other.
This is none other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven. Gen. xxviii. 17.
4. None of sometimes signifies only emphatically not.
My people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me. Psal. lxxxi. 11.
NONE'NTITY. n. f. [from non and entity.]
1. Nonexistence.
When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or nothing cannot bring its self-out of nonentity into something. Bentley's Sermon.
2. A thing not existing.
There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found. South.
We have heard, and think it pity that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity. Arbut. and Pope's Mar. Scrib.
NONEXISTENCE. n. f. [from non and existence.] Inexistence;
state of not existing.
A method of many writers, which depreciates the esteem of miracles is, to false not only real verities, but also non-existences. Brown's Vulgar Errors, &c.
NONJURING.

NOO

NONJURING. adj. [from non and jurare, Latin.] Belonging to those who will not swear allegiance to the Hanoverian family.
This objection was offered me by a very pious, learned, and worthy gentleman of the nonjuring party. Swift.
NONJUROR. n. f. [from non and juror.] One who conceiving James II. unjustly deposed, refuses to swear allegiance to those who have succeeded him.
NONNATURAL. n. f. [from non and natural.] Physicians reckon these to be fix, viz. air, meat and drink, sleep and watching, motion and rest, retention and excretion, and the passions of the mind.
The fix nonnatural are such as neither naturally constitutive, nor merely destructive, do preserve or destroy according unto circumstance. Brown's V. Err.
NONPAREIL. n. f. [from non and pareil, French.]
1. Excellence unequalled.
My lord and master loves you: O such love
Could be but recompens'd tho' you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
2. A kind of apple.
3. Printers letter of a small size, on which small Bibles and Common Prayers are printed.
NONPLUS. n. f. [from non and plus, Latin.] Puzzle; inability to say or do more. A. le word.
Let it seem never so strange and impossible, the nonplus of my reason will yield a fairer opportunity to my faith. South.
One or two rules, on which their conclusions depend, in most men have govern'd all their thoughts: take those from them and they are at a loss, and their understanding is perfectly at a nonplus. Locke.
Such an artful did not begin the matter at a venture, and when put to a nonplus, pause and hesitate which way he should proceed; but he had first in his comprehensive intellect a complex idea of the whole organical body. Bentley.
TO NONPLUS. v. a. [from the noun.] To confound; to puzzle; to put to a stand; to stop.
Nor is the composition of our own bodies the only wonder; we are as much nonplus'd by the most contemptible worm and plant.
His parts were so accomplish'd,
That right or wrong he ne'er was nonplus'd. Hudibras.
That sin that is a pitch beyond all those, must needs be such an one as must nonplus the devil himself to proceed farther. South.
What, you are confounded, and stand mute?
Somewhat nonplus'd to hear you deny your name. Dryden.
Tom has been eloquent for half an hour together, when he has been nonplus'd by Mr. Dry's desiring him to tell what it was that he endeavoured to prove. Spekt. 471.
NONRESIDENCE. n. f. [from non and residence.] Failure of residence.
If the character of persons chosen into the church had been regarded, there would be fewer complaints of non-residence. Swift.
NONRESIDENT. n. f. [from non and resident.] One who neglects to live at the proper place.
As to nonresidence, there are not ten clergymen in the kingdom who can be termed nonresidents. Swift.
NONRESISTANCE. n. f. [from non and resistance.] The principle of not opposing the king; ready obedience to a superior.
NONSENSE. n. f. [from non and sense.]
1. Unmeaning or ungrammatical language.
Till under flood, all tales,
Like nonfense, are not true nor false. Hud. p. iii.
Many copies dispersed gathering new faults, I saw more nonfense than I could have cramm'd into it. Dryden.
This nonfense got into all the following editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope's Notes on Shakesp.
2. Trifles; things of no importance.
What's the world to him,
'Tis nonfense all. Thomson.
NONSENSICAL. adj. [from nonfense.] Unmeaning; foolish.
They had produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things, and nonsensical systems of the whole. Roy on the Creation.
NONSENSICALNESS. n. f. [from nonfense.] Ungrammatical jargon; foolish absurdity.
NONSENSELESS. n. f. [from nonfense.] One who cannot pay his debts.

Is the king's ship, in the deep nook, where once Thou call'dst me up. Shakesp. Temp.
Buy a foggy and a dirty farm
In that nook thotten isle of Albion. Shakesp. Hen. V.
The faggots were driven out of the great Ards, into a little nook of land near the river of Strangford; where they now possess a little territory. Davies.
Unspere
The spirit of Plato to unfold,
What worlds or what vast regions hold
Th' immortal mind that hath forsook
Her mansion in this fleshly nook. Milton's Poems.
Ithuriel and Zephon,
Search thro' this garden, leave unsearch'd no nook. Milt.
A third form'd within the ground
A various mold; and from the boiling cells,
By strange conveyance, fill'd each hollow nook. Milton.
NOON. n. f. [from non, Saxon; non, Welsh; non, Erse; supposed to be derived from nona, Latin, the ninth hour, at which their cena or chief meal was eaten; whence the other nations called the time of their dinner or chief meal, though earlier in the day, by the same name.]
1. The middle hour of the day; twelve; the time when the sun is in the meridian.
Fetch forth the flocks, there shall he sit 'till noon.—
'Till noon! 'till night, my lord, Shakesp. K. Lear.
The day already half his race had run,
And summon'd him to due repast at noon. Dryden.
If I turn my eyes at noon towards the sun, I cannot avoid the ideas which the light or sun produces in me. Locke.
2. It is taken for midnight.
Full before him at the noon of night,
He saw a quire of ladies. Dryden.
NOONDAY. n. f. [from noon and day.] Midday.
The bird of night did sit,
Ev'n at noonday, upon the market-places,
Hooting and shrieking. Shak. Jul. Cesar.
The dimmels of our intellectual eyes, Aristotle fifty compares to those of an owl at noonday. Boyle.
NOONDAY. adj. Meridional.
The scorching sun was mounted high,
In all its lustre to the noonday sky. Addison's Ovid.
NOONING. n. f. [from noon.] Repose at noon.
NOONTIDE. n. f. [from noon and tide.] Midday; time of noon.
Sorrow breaks seasons and repelling hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noonday night. Shak.
NOONTIDE. adj. Meridional.
Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noonday prick. Shakesp.
All things in best order to invite Noontide repast, or afternoon's repose. Milt. Par. Lyst.
We expect the morning red in vain;
'Tis hid in vapours, or obscur'd in rain.
The noonday yellow we in vain require;
'Tis black in storm, or red in lightning fire. Prior.
NOOSE. n. f. [from noose, entangled; a word found in the glosses of Lipsius, Mr. Lye.] A running knot which the more it is drawn binds the closer.
Can't thou with a weak angle strike the whale?
Catch with a hook, or with a noose intual? Sandys.
Where the hangman does dispose,
To special friend the knot of noose. Hud. p. i.
They run their necks into a noose,
They'd break 'em after, to break loose. Hud. p. iii.
Falsely he falls into some dangerous noose,
And then as meanly labours to get loose. Dryden.
A rope and a noose are no jesting matters. J. Bull.
To Noose. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a noose; to catch; to entrap.
The fin is woven with threads of different sizes, the least of them strong enough to noose and entrap us. Gov. Tongue.
NOR. n. f. A kind of bird called a bullfinch or redtail.
NOR. conjunct. [No or.]
1. A particle marking the second or subsequent branch of a negative proposition; correlative to neither or not.
Neither love, nor fear thee. Shakesp.
2. Two negatives are sometimes joined, but ill.
Mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt. Shakesp. As you like it.
3. Neither is sometimes included in nor, but not elegantly.
Pow'r, disgrace, nor death could ought divert Thy glorious tongue thus to reveal thy heart. Daniel.
Simois nor Xanthus shall be wanting there;
A new Achilles shall in arms appear. Dryden.
4. Nor is sometimes used in the first branch for neither.
Idle nymph, I pray thee, be Modest, and not follow me,
I nor love myself, nor thee. Ben. Jonson.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Or the fierce pains not feel Milton.
But how perplex, alas! is human fate?
I whom nor avarice, nor pleasures move;
Yet must myself be made a slave to love. Walsh.
NORTH. n. f. [norð, Saxon.] The point opposite to the sun in the meridian.
More unconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And being anger'd puffs away from thence,
Turning his face to the dew dropping south. Shakef.
The tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing. Shakef. Cymb.
Fierce Boreas issues forth
T' invade th' frozen waggon of the north. Dryd.
NORTH. adj. Northern; being in the north.
This shall be your north border from the great sea to mount Hor. Nam. xxxiv. 7.
NORTHEAST. n. f. [noord-oost, Dutch.] The point between the north and east.
The inferior sea towards the south-east, the Ionian towards the south, and the Adriatick on the north-east side, were commanded by three different nations. Arbutnot.
NORTHERLY. adj. [from north.] Being towards the north.
The northerly and southerly winds, commonly esteemed the causes of cold and warm weather, are really the effects of the cold or warmth of the atmosphere. Derham.
NORTHERN. adj. [from north.] Being in the north.
Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland. Shakef.
If we erect a red-hot wire until it cool, and then hang it up with wax and untwisted silk, where the lower end which cooled next the earth doth rest, that is the northern point.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
NORTHSTAR. n. f. [north and star.] The polestar; the lode-star.
If her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her, she would infect to the northstar.
Shakespeare's M. Ad. Ab.
NORTHWARD. adj. [north and peapb, Saxon.] Being towards the north.
NORTHWARD. } adv. [north and peapb, Saxon.] Towards NORTHWARDS. } the north.
Mistake me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun.
Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles,
And prove whose blood is reddest. Shakespeare.
Going northward aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last they crossed the ocean to Spain. Bacon.
Northward beyond the mountains we will go.
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow. Dryden.
A close prisoner in a room, twenty foot square, being at the north side of his chamber, is at liberty to walk twenty foot southward, not walk twenty foot northward. Locke.
NORTHWEST. n. f. [north and west.] The point between the north and west.
The bathing places that they may remain under the sun until evening, he expecteth unto the summer setting, that is northwest. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
NORTHWEST. n. f. [north and wind.] The wind that blows from the north.
The clouds were fled,
Driven by a keen northwind. Milton.
When the fierce northwind, with his airy forces
Rears up the Baltic to a foaming fury. Watts.
NOSE. n. f. [næse, norja, Saxon.]
1. The prominence on the face, which is the organ of scent and the emunctory of the brain.
Down with the nose,
Take the bridge quite away
Of him that, his particular to forefend, Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakef. Timon of Athens.
Nose of Turks and Tartars lips. Shakef. Macbeth.
Our decrees,
Dead to infiction, to themselves are dead;
And liberty plucks justice by the nose. Sha. M. of Ven.
There can be no reason given why a visage somewhat longer, or a nose flatter, could not have consulted with such a soul. Locke.
Poetry takes me up so entirely, that I scarce see what passes under my nose. Pope's Letters.
2. The end of anything.
The lungs are as bellows, the apertæ arteria is the nose of the bellows, or as a channel in the found board of an organ.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
3. Scent; fragrance.
We are not offended with a dog for a better nose than his master. Collier on Envy.
4. To lead by the nose. To drag by force: as, a bear by his ring. To lead blindly.
Tho' authority be a stubborn bear,
Yet he is oft led by the nose with gold. Sha. W. Tale.

NOT

In suits which a man doth not understand, it is good to refer them to some friend, but let him chuse well his referendary, else he may be led by the nose. Bacon.
That some occult design doth lie
In bloody cynarctomachy,
How faints lead brothers by the nose. Hudibras, p. 1.
This is the method of all popular shams, when the multitude are to be led by the nose into a fool's paradise. Dea.
5. To thrust one's nose into the affairs of others. To be meddling with other people's matters; to be a busy body.
6. To put one's nose out of joint. To put one out in the affections of another.
To NOSE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To scent; to smell.
Nose him as you go up the stairs. Shakef. Hamlet.
2. To face; to oppose.
To NOSE. v. n. To look big; to bluster.
Adultrous Anthony
Gives his potent regiment to a trull
That noses it against us. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.
NOSEBLEED. n. f. [nose and bleed.] A kind of herb.
NOSEGAY. n. f. [nose and gay.] A pole; a bunch of flowers.
She hath made me four and twenty nogs for the flowers.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Ariel fought
The close recesses of the virgin's thought;
As on the nosegay in her breast reclin'd,
He watch'd th' ideas rising in her mind. Pope.
Get you gone in the country to dress up nogs for a holy-day. Arbutnot's Hist. of 7. Ball.
NOSELESS. adj. [from nose.] Wanting a nose; deprived of the nose.
Mangled Myrmidons,
Noseless, and handleless, hackt and chipt, come to him. Sha.
NOSESMART. n. f. [nose and smart.] The herb cress.
NOSE. n. f. [from nose.] The extremity of a thing: as, the nose of a pair of bellows.
NOSELOGY. n. f. [nôse and lôgos.] Doctrine of diseases.
NOSOPHETICK. adj. [nôse and ptois.] Producing diseases.
The qualities of the air are nosophetick; that is, have a pow'r of producing diseases. Arbutnot on Air.
NOSTRIL. n. f. [nose and stril, a hole, Saxon.] The cavity in the nose.
Turn then my freshest reputation to
A favour that may strike the dullest nostril. Shakef.
Sinks which the nostrils straight abhor, are not the most pernicious. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
He form'd thee, Adam, and in thy nostrils breath'd
The breath of life. Milton's P. Lys, b. vii.
The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful both for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.
These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatic scent. Mere's Divine Dialogue.
NOSTRUM. n. f. [Latin.] A medicine not yet made publick, but remaining in some single hand.
Very extraordinary, and one of his nostrums, let it be writ upon his monument, Hic jacet auctor hujus argumenti; for no body ever used it before. Stillington.
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove? Pope.
NOT. adv. [ne nups, Saxon; niet, Dutch.]
1. The particle of negation, or refusal.
If thou be the world's great parent,
How falls it then that with thy furious fervour
Thou dost afflict as well the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely helms despise? Spenser.
His countenance likes me not. Shakef. K. Lear.
The man held his peace, to wit whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not. Gen. xxiv. 21.
Let each man do as to his fancy seems;
I wait, not I, 'till you have better dreams.
This objection hinders not but that the heroic action en-terprised for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well executed now as it was of old. Dryden.
Grammar being to teach men not to speak, but to speak correctly: where rhetoric is not necessary, grammar may be spared. Locke on Education.
This day, be bread and peace my lot;
All else beneath the sun
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not,
And let thy will be done. Pope's Universal Prayer.
2. It denotes cessation or extinction. No more.
Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not. Job vii. 8.
NOTABLE. adj. [notable, Fr. notabilis, Latin.] Remarkable; memorable; observable.
The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears; which, it seems, all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney, b. iii.

NOT

The same is notified in the notable places of the dioceses.
Whitgift.
In the parliament at Kilkenny, many notable laws were enacted, which shew, for the law doth best discover enormities, how much the English colonies were corrupted.
Davies on Ireland.
Two young men appeared notable in strength, excellent in beauty, and comely in apparel. Mac. iii. 26.
They bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken. Clarendon.
Both armies lay still without any notable action, for the space of ten days. Clarendon, b. viii.
Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables which men of foreign nations record.
Addison.
Cæsar, whose great sagacity and conduct put his success as much out of the power of chance as human reason could well do, yet upon occasion of a notable experiment, that had like to have lost him his whole army at Dyrrachium, tells us the power of it in his commentaries. South's Serm.
It is impossible but a man must have first passed this notable stage, and got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.
2. Careful; bustling in contempt and irony.
This absolute monarch was as notable a guardian of the fortunes, as of the lives of his subjects. When any man grew rich, to keep him from being dangerous to the state, he sent for all his goods. Addison's Freeholder, N° 10.
NOTABENESS. n. f. [from notable.] Appearance of business; importance. In contempt.
NOTABLY. adv. [from notable.]
1. Memorably; remarkably.
This we see notably proved, in that the oft polling of hedges conduces much to their lasting. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. With consequence; with shew of importance; ironically.
Mention the king of Spain or Poland, and he talks very notably; but if you go out of the gazette, you drop him.
Addison's Spectator, N° 105.
NOTARIAL. adj. [from notary.] Taken by a notary.
It may be called an authentic writing, though not a publick instrument, though want of a notarial evidence. Ayliffe.
NOTARY. n. f. [notaire, Fr. from notarius, Latin.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.
There is a declaration made to have that very book, and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorized notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own. Hooker.
Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your bond. Shakef. M. of Venice.
One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act. Bacon's New Atlantis.
So I but your recorder am in this.
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary, for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make this verse. Donne.
They have in each province, intendants and notaries. Temp.
NOTARION. n. f. [notarius, Latin.]
1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks: as,
by figures or letters.
Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods. Cocker.
2. Meaning; signification.
A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building.
Confidence, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action; and so is properly the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice.
South's Sermons.
NOTCH. n. f. [nochia, Italian.] A nick; a hollow cut in
any thing.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin, of a pyramid figure apolitely set, and with transverse notches. Grew's Museum.
From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes:
There take my tally of ten thousand pound.
He shew'd a conima ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making here a perfect botch,
Thrusts your poor vowel from his notch. Swift.
To NOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.
He was too hard for him directly: before Corioli, he scotched him and notch'd him like a carabonato. Shakef.
The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancelled and transversely notched. Grew's Museum.

NOT

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear, Pope.
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.
NOTCHWEE'D. n. f. [notch and weed.] An herb called orach.
NOTE. [for ne note.] May not.
Ne let him then admire,
But yield his sense to be too blunt and bafe, Fairy Q.
That note without an hound fine footing trace. Fairy Q.
NOTE. n. f. [nota, Lat. notte, Fr.]
1. Mark; token.
Whoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession whereby the world knoweth what they are. Hosher, b. iii.
2. Notice; heed.
Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence. Shakef.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin,
Worthy the note. Shakef. All's well that ends well.
3. Reputation; consequence.
Divers men of note have been brought over into England.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Andronicus and Junia are of note among the apostles. Rom. xvi. 7.
As for metals, authors of good note assure us, that even they have been observed to grow. Boyle.
4. Reproach; stigma.
The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat. Shakef.
5. Account; information; intelligence.
She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man i' th' moon's too slow. Shakef. Temp.
In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage be not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort re-compens'd for his discovery. Bacon's Essay 49.
6. Tune; voice.
These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude so many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls. Hooker, b. iv.
The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.
I now must change those notes to tragick. Milton.
You that can tune your sounding strings so well,
Of ladies beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.
One common note on either lyre do strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike. Dryden.
7. Single found in music.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
8. State of being observed.
Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note; whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh but on festivals. Bacon.
9. Short hint; small paper.
He will'd me
In heedfull't reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Shakespeare.
In the body's prison so she lies,
As through the body's windows the must look,
Her divers notes out of the world's great book. Davies.
10. Abbreviation; symbol.
Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations. Baker on Learning.
11. A small letter.
A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had inclos'd a note. Dryden.
12. Written paper.
I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust. Swift.
13. A paper given in confession of a debt.
His note will go farther than my bond. John Bull.
14. Explanatory annotation.
The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations. Felton on the Classics.
NOTEBOOK. n. f. [note and book.] A book in which notes and memorandums are set down.
Cassius all his faults observ'd;
Set in a notebook, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. Shakespeare. J. Caesar.
To NOTE. v. a. [note, Latin; noter, French.]

NOT

1. To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.
The fool hath much pined away.
No more of that, I have noted it well. Shakesf. K. Lear.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I began to note
The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat. Addis. Ovid.
Wandering from clime to clime, observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
2. To deliver, to set down.
Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noteth how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the sermons and chapters read. Hooker, b. v.
Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever. Is. xxx. 8.
3. To charge with a crime.
Sine ulla Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julia's, who were both noted of incontinency. Dryden.
4. [In music.] To set down the notes of a tune.
NOTED, part. adj. [from note.] Remarkable; eminent; celebrated.
A noted chymist procured a privilege, that none but he should vend a spirit. Boyle.
Justinian's laws, if we may believe a noted author, have not the force of laws in France or Holland. Baker.
- NOTER, n. f. [from note.] He who takes notice.
- NOTHING, n. f. [no and thing; nothing, Scottish.]
  1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation; opposed to something.
It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For, if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Gray's Cyp.
We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley's Sermon.
This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts's Logic.
  2. Nonexistence.
Mighty states characterless are graced
To dusty nothing. Shakesf. Troilus and Cressida.
  3. Not any thing; no particular thing.
There shall nothing die. Ex. ix. 4.
Yet had his aspect nothing of fever,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.
Philosophy wholly speculative, is barren and produces nothing but vain ideas. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone. Addison on the War.
  4. No other thing.
Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle you to God's acceptance. Wakes's Prep. for Death.
Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Lake.
  5. No quantity or degree.
The report which the troops of horse make, would add nothing of courage to their fellows. Clarendon.
  6. No importance; no use; no value.
The outward show of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church. Spenser's Ireland.
Behold, ye are of nothings, and your work of naught. Isaiah xli. 24.
  7. No possession or fortune.
A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate. Shak. W. Tale.
  8. No difficulty; no trouble.
We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray on the Creation.
  9. A thing of no proportion.
The charge of making the ground, and otherwise is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
  10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.
I had rather have one scratch my head i'th' fun,
When the alarm were struck, than idly fit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakespeare's Cor.
My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive,

NOT

- 'Tis nothing, says the fool; but says the friend,
This nothing, Sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your drooping-belly swell? Dryden.
That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do.
- NOTHING, n. f. [from nothing.]
  1. Nility; nonexistence.
His art did express
A quiescence even from nothingness,
From dull privations, and lean emptiness. Dante.
  2. Nothing; thing of no value.
I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forlorn carcase. Hadrianus, p. i.
  - NOTICE, n. f. [notice, French; notitia, Latin.]
    1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.
The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from. Lact.
This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Lact.
How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.
    2. Information; intelligence given or received.
I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his duchess will be here. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
  - NOTIFICATIONS, n. f. [notification, F. from notify.] Act of making known; representation by marks or symbols.
Four or five torches elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may, by agreement, give great variety of notifications. Holder's Elements of Speech.
  - TO NOTIFY, v. a. [notify, Fr. notifico; Latin.] To declare; to make known; to publish.
There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker, b. ii. f. 2.
The same is notified in the notablest places of the whole dioceses. Whitgift.
Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South's Sermon.
This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year: a kind of standard by which we measure time. Holder.
  - NOTION, n. f. [notion, Fr. notio, Latin.]
    1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.
Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South's Sermon.
The fiction of some beings which are not in nature; second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden's State of Innocence.
What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Neut. Opt.
There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and it's laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cibney's Phil. Prin.
That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, with, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, with, &c. Watts's Logic.
    2. Sentiment; opinion.
God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notions vain. Milt.
It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison's Preface to the Spectator, No. 30.
Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.
    3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.
His notion weakens, his discernings Are lethargy'd. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milt. P. L.
  - NOTIONAL, adj. [from notion.]
    1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.
The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven,

NOT

- heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon's Natural History, No. 835.
- Happiness, object of that waking dream
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade, Prior.
National good, by fancy only made.
We must be wary, lest we ascribe any real subsistence or personality to this nature or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; and denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of it doing. Bentley's Sermon.
2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.
The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glauco. Stepl. c. xxx.
  - NOTIONALITY, n. f. [from notional.] Empty, ungrounded opinion. A word not in use.
I aimed at the advance of science, by discrediting empty and talkative notional. Glauco. to Albius.
  - NOTIONALLY, adv. [from notional.] In idea; mentally; in our conception, though not in reality.
The whole rational nature of man consists of two faculties, understanding and will, whether really or notionally distinct, I shall not dispute. Norris's Miscel.
  - NOTORIETY, n. f. [notoriety, Fr. from notorius.] Public knowledge; public exposure.
We see what a multitude of pagan testimonies may be produced for all those remarkable passages; and indeed of several, that more than answer your expectation, as they were not subjects in their own nature so exposed to public notoriety. Addison on Christi. Relig.
  - NOTORIOUS, adj. [notorius, Lat. notorius, Fr.] Publicly known; evident to the world; apparent; not hidden. It is commonly used of things known to their disadvantage; whence by those who do not know the true signification of the word, an atrocious crime is called a notorious crime, whether public or secret.
What need you make such ado in cloaking a matter too notorious. Whitgift.
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Shakesf.
I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame. Shakesf. Com. Err.
In the time of king Edward III. the impediments of the conquest of Ireland are notorious. Davies.
What notorious vice is there that doth not blemish a man's reputation?
The inhabitants of Naples have been always very notorious for leading a life of laziness and pleasure, which arises partly out of the plenty of their country, and partly out of the temper of their climate. Addison on Italy.
The bishops have procured some small advancement of rents; although it be notorious that they do not receive the third penny of the real value. Swift's Miscel.
  - NOTORIOUSLY, adv. [from notorius.] Publicly; evidently; openly.
The exposing himself notoriously, did sometimes change the fortune of the day. Clarendon, b. viii.
This is notoriously discoverable in some differences of brake or fern. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii.
Ovid tells us, that the cause was notoriously known at Rome, though it be left to obscure to after ages. Dryden.
Should the genius of a nation be more fixed in government, than in morals, learning, and complexion; which do all notoriously vary in every age. Swift.
  - NOTORIOUSNESS, n. f. [from notorius.] Public fame; notoriety.
  - TO NOTT, v. a. To sneer. Ainsf.
  - NOTWHEAT, n. f. [not and what.]
OF wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requieth the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbearded, being contented with a meaner earth. Carew.
NOTWITHSTANDING, conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hobbes.]
1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.
Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were

NOU

- so transported that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decay of Piety.
2. Although. This use is not proper.
A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Addison.
  3. Nevertheless; however.
They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker, b. iv.
The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven: notwithstanding this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker, b. v. f. 23.
He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day, for melting charity:
Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humourous as winter. Shakesf. Henry IV.
- NOTUS, n. f. [Latin.] The southwind.
With adverse blast upturns them from the south,
Nets and Asir black, with thund'rous clouds
From Sicra Lionea. Milton's Par. Lost, b. x.
- NOVATION, n. f. [novatio, Latin.] The introduction of something new.
NOVATOR, n. f. [Latin.] The introducer of something new.
NOVEL, adj. [novellus, Latin; novelle, French.]
  1. New; not ancient; not used of old; unusual.
The Presbyterians are exacters of submission to their novel injunctions, before they are stamped with the authority of laws. King Charles.
It is no novel usurpation, but though void of other title, has the prescription of many ages. Decay of Piety.
  2. [In the civil law.] Appendant to the code, and of later enactment.
By the novel constitutions, burial may not be denied to any one. Ayliffe's Parergon.

NOVEL, n. f. [novelle, French.]
  1. A small tale, generally of love.
Nothing of a foreign nature; like the trifling novels which Ariosto inserted in his poems. Dryden.
Her mangl'd fame in barb'rous pastime lost,
The coxcomb's novel and the drunkard's toast. Prior.
  2. A law annexed to the code.
By the civil law, no one was to be ordained a presbyter till he was thirty-five years of age: though by a later novel it was sufficient, if he was above thirty. Ayliffe's Par.

NOVELIST, n. f. [from novel.]
  1. Innovator; assertor of novelty.
Telephus, who hath renewed the philosophy of Parmenides, is the best of novelists. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 69.
Who nature's secrets to the world did teach,
Yet that great foul our novelists impeach. Denham.
The fooleries of some affected novelists have discredited new discoveries. Glauco. Stepl.
  2. A writer of novels.
NOVELTY, n. f. [nouveauté, French.] Newness; state of being unknown to former times.
They which do nothing but that which men of account did before them, are, although they do amiss, yet the less faulty, because they are not the authors of harm: and doing well, their actions are freed from prejudice or novelty. Hooker, b. v. f. 7.
Novelty is only in request; and it is dangerous to be aged in any kind of course. Shakesf. Measure for Measure.
As religion entertains our speculations with great objects, so it entertains them with new; and novelty is the great parent of pleasure; upon which account it is that men are so much pleased with variety. South's Sermons.

NOVEMBER, n. f. [Latin.] The eleventh month of the year, or the ninth reckoned from March, which was, when the Romans named the months, accounted the first.
November is drawn in a garment of changeable green, and black upon his head. Peachment on Drawing.

NOVENARY, n. f. [novenarius, Latin.] Number of nine; nine collectively.
Ptolemy by parts and numbers impleth climatrical years; that is, septenaries and novenaries. Brown's V. Err.
Looking upon them as in their original differences and combinations, and as selected out of a natural flock of nine quaternions, or four novenaries, their nature and differences lie most obvious to be understood. Holder.

NOVENARI, adj. [Universalis, from novena, Latin.] Having the manner of a stepmother; becoming a stepmother.
When the whole tribe of birds by incubation, produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novenal way. Derham.

NOUGHT, n. f. [the aube, not any thing, Saxon; as therefore we write ought not ought for any thing, we should, according to analogy, write naught not nought, for nothing; but a custom has irreverently prevailed of using naught for bad, and nought for nothing.

NOU

1. Not any thing; nothing.

In young Rinaldo fierce desires he spy'd,
And noble heart, of rest impatient,

To wealth or sovereign power he nought apply'd. Fairfax.

Who cannot see this palpable device?

Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not?

Bad is the world, and it will come to nought,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought. Shakef.

Such smiling rogues as these foon ev'ry passion;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With ev'ry gale and vary of their matters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakef.

Ye are of nothing, and your work of nought. If. xli. 24.

And be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Par. Reg.

2. To set at nought; not to value; to slight; to scorn; to disregard.

Ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof. Prov. i. 25.

NOVICE. n. f. [novice, French; novitius, Latin.]

1. One not acquainted with any thing; a fresh-man; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

Triple-twin'd whore! 'tis thou Hast fold me to this novice. Shakef. Ant. and Cleop.

Brave plantagenet,
That princely novice was struck dead by thee. Shakef.

Bring me to the fight of Isabella,
A novice of this place. Shakef. Measure for Measure.

You are novices; 'tis a world to see How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest threw. Shakef.

We have novices and apprentices, that the succession of the former employed men do not fall. Bacon.

If any unexperienced young novice happens into the fatal neighbourhood of such pests, presently they are plying his full purse and his empty pate. South's Sermons.

I am young, a novice in the trade,
How fool of love, unpractis'd to persuade;
And want the footing arts that catch the fair,
But caught myself lie struggling in the snare.
And she I love, or laughs at all my pain,
Or knows her worth too well, and pays me with disdain. Dry.

In these experiments I have set down such circumstances by which either the phenomenon might be rendered more conspicuous, or a novice might more easily try them, or by which I did try them only. Newt. Opt.

2. One who has entered a religious house, but not yet taken the vow.

NOVITIATE. n. f. [noviciat, French.]

1. The state of a novice; the time in which the rudiments are learned.

This is so great a masterpiece in sin, that he must have passed his tyrannical or novitiate in finning, before he come to this, he be never to quick a proficient. South's Sermons.

2. The time spent in a religious house, by way of trial, before the vow is taken.

NOVITY. n. f. [novitas, Latin.] Newness; novelty.

Some conceive the might not yet be certain, that only man was privileged with speech, and being in the novity of the creation and unexperience of all things, might not be affrighted to hear a serpent speak. Brown's V. Err.

NOUL. The crown of the head. See NOLL. Spenser.

NOULD. Ne would; would not.

NOUN. n. f. [nomen, French; nomen, Latin.] The name of any thing in grammar.

A noun is the name of a thing, whether substance, mode or relation, which in speech is used to signify the same when there is occasion to affirm or deny any thing about it, or to express any relation it has in discourse to any other thing. Clark's Lat. Grammar.

Thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun and a verb, and such abominable words as no christian ear can endure to hear. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The boy, who scarce has paid his entrance down,
To his proud pedant, or declin'd a noun. Dryden.

TO NOURISH. v. a. [nourrir, French; nutrio, Latin.]

1. To encrease or support by food, or aliment of any kind.

He planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it. If. xlv. 14.

Thro' her nourish'd powers enlarg'd by thee,
She springs aloft. Thomson's Summer.

2. To support; to maintain.

Whilst in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shakespeare.

Pharaoh's daughter took him up, and nourish'd him for her own son. Acts vii. 21.

3. To encourage; to foment.

What madness was it with such proofs to nourish their contentions, when there were such effectual means to end all controversy? Hooker, l. ii. f. 7.

NOW

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion. Shakef.

Gorgias hired soldiers, and nourish'd war continually with the Jews. 2 Mac. x. 14.

4. To train, or educate.

Thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourish'd up in the words of faith. 1 Tim. iv. 6.

I travel not, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins. If. xxxiii. 4.

5. To promote growth or strength, as food.

In vegetables there is one part more nourishing than another; as grains and roots nourish more than their leaves. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 45.

TO NOURISH. v. n. To gain nourishment. Unusual.

Fruit trees grow full of mofs, which is caused partly by the coldness of the ground, whereby the parts nourish less. Bacon's Nat. Hist. No. 544.

NOURISHABLE. adj. [from nourish.] Susceptive of nourishment.

The chyle is mixed herewith, partly for its better conversion into blood, and partly for its more ready adhesion to all the nourishable parts. Crew's Colmag. b. i. c. 5.

NOURISHER. n. f. [from nourish.] The person or thing that nourishes.

Sleep, chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakespeare.

A restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age. Ruth vi. 13.

Milk warm from the cow is a great nourisher, and a good remedy in consumptions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Bran and swine's dung laid up together to rot, is a very great nourisher and comforter to a fruit tree. Bacon.

Please to taste
These bounties, which our nourisher hath caus'd
The earth to yield. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

NOURISHMENT. n. f. [nourishment, French.]

1. That which is given or received, in order to the support or encrease of growth or strength; food; sustenance; nutriment.

When the nourishment grows unfit to be assimilated, or the central heat grows too feeble to assimilate it, the motion ends in confusion, putrefaction, and death. Newt. Opt.

2. Nutrition; support of strength.

By temperance taught,
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milt. Par. Lgh.

3. Sustainment; supply of things needful.

He instructeth them, that as in the one place they use to refresh their bodies, so they may in the other learn to seek the nourishment of their souls. Hooker, b. v.

NOURSLING. n. f. The nurse; the nursing. Spenser.

NOURTURE. n. f. [nouriture, French; this was afterwards contracted to nurture.] Education; institution.

Thither the great magician Merlin came,
As was his use, oftentimes to visit me;
For he had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nurture to oversee. Fairy Queen, b. i.

TO NOURSEL. v. a. [The same I believe with nuzzle, and both, in their original import, corrupted from nurse.] To nurse up.

Bald friars and knavish shavelings fought to nurse the common people in ignorance, left being once acquainted with the truth of things, they would in time smell out the untruth of their packed pelf and masspenny religion. Spenser.

TO NOURSEL. v. a. [nuzzle, nuzzle, nurse.] To entrap; to ensnare; as in a noose or trap. They nuzzle hogs to prevent their digging. Hubbard.

NOW. adv. [nun, Sax. nun, Germ.]

1. At this time; at the time present.

Thy servants trade hath been about cattle, from our youth even until now. Gen. xlv. 34.

The Lord shall raise him up a king over Israel that day: but what? even now. 1 Kings xiv. 14.

Refer all the actions of this short and dying life to that state which will shortly begin, but never have an end; and this will approve itself to be wisdom at last, whatever the world judge of it now. Tillotson.

Now that languages abound with words standing for such combinations, an usual way of getting these complex ideas, is by the explication of those terms that stand for them. Locke.

2. A little while ago.

Now the blood of twenty thousand men
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled. Shakef.

How frail our passions!
They that but now for honour and for plate,
Made the sea blush, with blood resign their hate. Holm.

3. At one time or respect; at another time.

Now high, now low, now master up, now mis. Pope.

It is sometimes a particle of connection, like the French et, and Latin autem; as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was. Hooker, l. ii. f. 7.

NOW

to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our iniquities had shut up. Hooker, b. v. f. 44.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them. Shakef.

Then cried they all again, saying, not this man but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber. St. John.

NUT

My paper is a kind of nursery for authors, and some who have made a good figure here, will hereafter flourish under their own names. Addison's Guard.

4. Place where young children are nursed and brought up. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Were stol'n.
You see before you the spectacle of a Plantagenet, who hath been carried from the nursery to the sanctuary, from the sanctuary to the direful prison, from the prison to the hand of the cruel tormentor, and from that hand to the wide wilderness; for so the world hath been to me. Bacon.

Forthwith the devil did appear,
Not in the shape in which he plies
At miss's elbow when she lies;
Of stands before the nursery doors,
To take the naughty boy that roars.
They have public nurseries, where all parents are obliged to send their infants to be educated. Prior.

5. The place or state where any thing is fostered or brought up, from a nursery of children, or whence any thing is to be removed from a nursery of trees. Gull Trav.
This keeping of cows is of itself a very idle life, and a fit nursery for a thief. Spenser on Ireland.
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy. Shakespeare.
A luxurious court is the nursery of dilectables; it breeds them, it encourages, nourishes, and entertains them. L'Estrange.
A nursery erects its head,
Where queens are form'd and future heroes bred;
Where unfledg'd actors learn to laugh and cry. Dryden.

NURSLING. n. f. [from nurse.] One nursed up; a fondling.
Then was the held in sovereign dignity,
And made the nursling of nobility. Spenser.
I was his nursling once, and choice delights
His destin'd from the womb. Milton's Agonistes.
In their tender monage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head,
Indulge their childhood, and the nursling spare. Dryden.

NURTURE. n. f. [contracted from nouriture, French.]
1. Food; diet.
For this did th' angel twice descend?
Ordain'd thy nurture holy, as of a plant
Select and sacred. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Education; institution. Little used.
She should take order for bringing up of wards in good nurture, not suffer them to come into bad hands. Spenser.
The thorny point
Of bare distress, hath ta'en from me the shew
Of smooth civility; yet am I inland bred,
And know some nurture. Shakespeare. As you like it.

To NURTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To educate; to train; to bring up.
Thou broughtest it up with thy righteousness, and nurturest it in thy law, and reformedst it with thy judgment. 2 Esdr. viii. 12.

He was nurtured where he had been born in his first rudiments, till the years of ten.
When an insolent despiser of discipline, nurtured into impudence, shall appear before a church governour, severity and resolution are that governour's virtues. South.

2. To nurture up; to bring by care and food to maturity.
They suppose mother earth to be a great animal, and to have nurtured up her young offspring with a conscious tenderness. Bentley's Serm.

To NURSTLE. v. a. To fondle; to cherish. Corrupted from nurse. Ainsl.

NUT. n. f. [hnuz, Saxon; noet, Dutch; noix, Fr.]
1. The fruit of certain trees; it consists of a kernel covered by a hard shell. If the shell and kernel are in the center of a pulpy fruit, they then make not a nut but a stone.
One chanc'd to find a nut
In the end of which a hole was cut,
Which lay upon a hazel-root,
There scatter'd by a squirrel;
Which out the kernel gotten had;
When quoth this Fay, dear queen be glad,
Let Oberon be ne'er so mad,
I'll let you safe from peril. Dryden. Nymphid.

Nuts are hard of digestion, yet possess some good medicinal qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A small body with teeth, which correspond with the teeth of wheels.
The force of this faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat. Wilkin's Mathem. Magic.

Clocks and jacks, though the ferews and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move. Roy on the Creation.

NUTBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.] Brown like a nut kept long. Young and old come forth to play,

NUT

Till the live-long daylight fall,
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale.
When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach huge he laid about. Milton's Paradyse.
Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side, Hudibras, p. 1.
For which the nutbrown lads, Erithacis,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss. Dryden.
King Hardicnut, midst Danes and Saxons stout, Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on grout. King.

NUTCRACKERS. n. f. [nut and crack.] An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.
He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers. Addison's Spectator.

NUTGALL. n. f. [nut and gall.] Excrecence of an oak.
In vegetable excrecions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shape, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak. Brown.

NUTHATCH. n. f. A bird. Ainsl.

NUTJOBBER. n. f. A bird. Ainsl.

NUTPECKER. n. f. A bird. Ainsl.

NUTTHOOK. n. f. [nut and hook.] A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered. Nutbark, Nuthook, you lie. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

NUTMEG. n. f. [nut and mugit, French.]
The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweet-meat or as a curiosity. The nutmeg is of a roundish or oval figure, of a compact or firm texture, and its surface furrowed; it is of an extremely agreeable smell and an aromatick taste. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive. The Dutch import the nutmegs and mace from the East-Indies, and supply all Europe with them. The tree which produces them is not unlike our pear-tree in its manner of growth: its leaves, whether green or dried, have, when bruised, a very fragrant smell; and the trunk or branches, cut or broken off, yield a red liquor like blood. This tree is carefully cultivated. But that which produces the male nutmeg grows wild in the mountainous parts of the Moluccas. Nutmeg is much used in our foods, and is of excellent virtues as a medicine. Hill.
The second a dry and sterculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg. Brown's V. Br.
I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent. South.

NUTSHELL. n. f. [nut and shell.] The hard substance that encloses the kernel of the nut.
I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again. L'Estrange.
It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel. Locke.

NUTTREE. n. f. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts; abazle.
Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak. Pendemon.
Like beating nuttrees, makes a larger crop. Dryden.

NUTRICATION. n. f. [nutricatio, Lat.] Manner of feeding or being fed.
Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition. Brown.

NUTRIMENT. n. f. [nutrimentum, Latin.] That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.
This have
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment? Shakespeare.
The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body. South.
Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Miscell.

NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.] Having the qualities of food; alimental.
By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion. Arb.

NUTRITION. n. f. [from nutritio, nutris, Lat. nutrition, Fr.] The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or encreasing growth.
New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decayings; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed. Gleno. Sess. c. iii.
The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot. Pope.

NUZ

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutris, Latin.] Having the quality of nourishing.
O may'st thou often see Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within. Philips.
The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.

NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutris, Latin.] Nourishing; nutritive; alimental.
Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutritive. Harvey on Consump.

To NUZZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nurse; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]
1. To nurse; to foster.
Old men long nuzzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. South.

NYS

2. To go with the nose down like a hog.
He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with the sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot's John Bull.
Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arb. J. Bull.
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NYMPH. n. f. [νύμφη; nymphis, Lat.]
1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.
And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
Sucks from the sea, to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.
This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes could have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NYS. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.
Thou findest fault, where nys to be found,
And buidest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

OAK

O Has in English a long sound; as, drone, great, stone, alone, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, foot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a ferrie a subjoined; as, oam, or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, ferall, and even then sometimes short; as, sell.

1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.
O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Dray of Piety.
O! were he present, that his eyes and hands Might see, and urge, the death which he commands. Dryd.
 2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
 The vasty field of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very casks
 That did affright the air at Agincourt? Shakesp.
OAF. n. f. [This word is variously written; auff, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouph, a demon or fairy, in German alp, from which elf; and means properly the same with changing; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.
 These, when a child haps to be got,
 Which after proves an idiot,
 When folk perceives it thriveth not,
 The fault therein to smother:
 Some silly doating brainless calf,
 That understands things by the half,
 Says that the fairy left this oaf,
 And took away the other. Drayt. Nymphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.
OA'FISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.
OA'FISHNESS. n. f. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.
OAK. n. f. [ac, æ, Saxon; which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from oikos, a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Janus in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critic, signified among the Saxons, like oikos among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deducti potest, from oikos, strength; by taking the three first letters and then sinking the s, as is not uncommon.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are sinuated. The species are five. Miller.
 He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakesp.
 He lay along

Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shakesp.
 No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon's Nat. History.

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
 Shoots rising up and spreads by slow degrees;
 Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
 Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dry.
 An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.
 A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter, incrusting and affixed to oak leaves. Woodward on Foss.
 In the days of Homer every grove, river, fountain, and

OAR

oak tree, were thought to have their peculiar deities. Odys.
 Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
 The weeping amber and the balmey tree,
 While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
 And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK. [Evergreen.]
 The leaves are, for the most part, indented, or sinuated, and in some the edges of the leaves are prickly, and are evergreen: it hath amentaceous flowers, which are produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree: the fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.
OA'K'PLE. n. f. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in catapler, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
OA'KEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak. No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships. Bacon's Advice to Villains.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
 Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.
 Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
 With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.
 An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Adisson.
 He hatched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot's J. Bull.

OA'KENPIN. n. f. An apple.
Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortimer.
OA'KUM. n. f. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they chalk the seams of the ships, of old sea and weather beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown so rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and wastes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Ral.
 Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
 Their left hand does the calking-iron guide;
 The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryden.

OAR. n. f. [ape, Saxon; perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with ara, to plow, ara, Lat.] A long pole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

The oars were silver,
 Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
 The water which they beat, to follow falter,
 As amorous of their strokes. Shakesp. Jul. Cesar.
 So tow'rs a ship the oar-sim'd galleys ply,
 Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
 Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham's Pers.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
 And untought Indian, on the stream did glide;
 E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn.
 Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryden.
 Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Willm.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.
 He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
 And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.
 To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.
 His bold head

'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
 Himself with his good arms in lully strokes
 To th' shore. Shakespeare's Tempest.

OA'RY. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.
 His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
 In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.
 The swan with arched neck,
 Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
 Her state with oary feet. Milton.

OAST. n. f. A kiln. Not in use.
 Empty the binn into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oast or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.
OATCA'KE. n. f. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or oatcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacocks.
OA'TEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.
 When shepherds pipe on oaten straws, Shakesp.
 And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks.

OATH. n. f. [oath, Gothick; æð, Saxon.] The distance between the noun oath, and the verb swear, is very observable, as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
 For whose dear sake thou then didst rend thy faith
 Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury to love me. Shakespeare.
 He that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilt as I am a soldier.

—An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate. Shakespeare.
 We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Bacon.
 Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OA'THABLE. adj. [from oath.] A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

Altho' I know you'll swear
 Into strong shudders th' immortal gods, Shakespeare.
OATBREAKING. n. f. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.
 His oathbreaking he mended thus,
 By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakespeare. Hen. IV.

OA'TMALT. n. f. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.
 In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barleymalt. Mortimer's Hist.
OA'TMEAL. n. f. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbutnot on Ailment.
 Of ashes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Cyp.
OA'TMEAL. n. f. An herb. Arbutnot.
OATS. n. f. [æcen, Saxon.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.

It is of the grass leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.
 The oats have eaten the horses. Shakespeare.
 It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatweed, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Locke.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.
OA'THISTLE. n. f. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Amf.
OBAMBULATION. n. f. [obambulation, from obambule, Latin.] The act of walking about. Diél.
 To OBDU'CE. v. a. [obduce, Latin.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but many all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.
OBPUCTION. n. f. [from obducere, obducere, Latin.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBPU'ACY. n. f. [from obducere.] Inflexible wickedness; impudence; hardness of heart.
 Thou think'st me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obducacy and perfidy. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
 God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obducacy. South's Serm.

OBURATE. adj. [obduratus, Latin.]
 1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obdurate in ill; hardened; impatient.
 Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
 That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;
 Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakespeare.
 If when you make your prayers,

OBE

God should be so obdurate as yourselves, Shakespeare.
 How would it fare with your departed souls?
 Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible; Shakespeare.
 Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakespeare.
 To convince the proud what figs avail,
 Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
 They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milt.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
 My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.
 2. Hardened; firm; stubborn.
 Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing force could charm
 Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast. Milton.
 With stubborn patience, as with triple steel,
 No such thought ever strikes his marbled, obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged.
 They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.
OBURATELY. adv. [from obdurate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impatiently.

OBURATENESS. n. f. [from obdurate.] Stubbornness; inflexibility; impetuosity.
OBURATION. n. f. [from obdurate.] Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obdurate in evil, that through a forward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker, b. iv.
OBURATED. adj. [obduratus, Latin.] Hardened; inflexible; impatient.

This saw his hapless face, but stood obdur'd,
 And to rebellious fight rallied their pow'r Inferiats. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
OBEDIENCE. n. f. [obediencia, Fr. obedientia, Latin.] Obedience; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shakespeare's K. Lear.
 Thy husband
 Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
 But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shakespeare.
 His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. Rom. vi. 16.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon's War with Spain.

Nor can this be,
 But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
 Obedience to the law of God, imposed
 On penalty of death. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
OBEDIENT. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.
 To this her mother's plot
 She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise. Shakespeare. M. IV. of Wind.
 He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Phil. ii. 8.
 The chief his orders gives; th' obedient band,
 With due observance, wait the chief's command. Pope.
OBEDIENTIAL. adj. [obediens, Latin.] Obedient; according to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the command.
 Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obediential submission to the commands. Hammond.

OBEDIENTLY. adv. [from obedient.] With obedience.
 We should behave ourselves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Wake's Prep. for Death.

OBESANCE. n. f. [obesancia, Fr.] This word is formed by corruption from obsequies, an act of reverence. A bow; a courtesy; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Bartholomew my page,
 See dress'd in all suits like a lady;
 Then call him Madam, do him all obesance. Shakespeare.
 Bathsheba bowed and did obesance unto the king. 1 K. i. 16.

O B J

- The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obeisance made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.
- OBLISK. n. f. [obelliscus, Latin.]
1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.
Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.
2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].
He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what redundant. Grew.
OBEQUITA'TION. n. f. [from obequito, Latin.] The act of riding about.
OBERRA'TION. n. f. [from obero, Latin.] The act of wandering about.
OBESE. adj. [obesus, Latin.] Fat; loaden with flesh.
OBESENESS. n. f. [from obese.] Morbid fatness; incumbrance of flesh.
On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a phthisis; or on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; or on their smallness, obesity. Grew's Cosmol. b. ii.
TO OBEY. v. a. [obey, French; obedi, Latin.]
1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.
The will of heav'n
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shakef. Hen. VIII.
I am asham'd, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakef.
Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that ye should obey in the lusts thereof. Rom. vi. 12.
Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Africk and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way. Dryden.
2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, obey au roi.
He commanded the trumpets to found; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courtes, breaking their staves. Sidney.
The fit hark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as the did desire. Fairy Q.
His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Rom. vi. 10.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton.
OBJECT. n. f. [obijet, Fr. objectum, Latin.]
1. That about which any power or faculty is employed.
Pardon
The flat unrais'd spirit, that hath dar'd,
On this unworthy scaffold to bring forth
So great an object. Shakespeare's Henry V.
They are her farthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end. Davies.
The object of true faith is, either God himself, or the word of God; God who is believed in, and the word of God as the rule of faith, or matter to be believed. Hamm.
Those things in ourselves, are the only proper objects of our zeal, which, in others, are the unquestionable subjects of our praises. Sprat's Serm.
Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of the will. Dryden's Duffresney.
2. Something presented to the senses to raise any affection or emotion in the mind.
Dishonour not your eye
By throwing it on any other object. Shakef.
Why else this double object in our sight,
Of sight pursu'd in the air, and o'er the ground. Milton.
This pessenger felt some degree of concern, at the sight of so moving an object, and therefore withdrew. Atterbury.
3. [In grammar.] Any thing influenced by somewhat else.
The accusative after a verb transitive, or a sentence in room thereof, is called, by grammarians, the object of the verb.
OBJECTGLASS. n. f. Glas remotest from the eye.
An objectglass of a telescope I once mended, by grinding it on pitch with putty, and leaning easily on it in the grinding, lest the putty should scratch it. Newt. Opt.
TO OBJECT. v. a. [objecter, Fr. objicere, objectum, Latin.]
1. To oppose; to present in opposition.
Flowers growing scattered in divers beds, will shew more so as that they be object to view at once. Bacon.

O B L

- Pallas to their eyes
The mist objected, and condens'd the skies. Pope.
2. To propose as a charge criminal; or a reason adverse; with to or against.
Were it not some kind of blemish to be like unto Infidels and Heathens, it would not so usually be objected; men would not think it any advantage in the cause of religion to be able therewith justly to charge their adversaries. Haller.
The book requirerh due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against any such as are to be ordered. Whitef.
Men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and forest difficulties; for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requirerh a new work; which false point of wisdom is the bane of business.
This the adversaries of faith have too much reason to object against too many of its professors; but against the faith itself nothing at all. Sprat's Serm.
It was objected against a late painter, that he drew many graceful pictures, but few of them were like. Dryden.
Others object the poverty of the nation, and difficulties in furnishing greater supplies. Addison's State of the War.
There was but this single fault that Erasmus, though an enemy, could object to him. Atterbury.
OBJECTION. n. f. [objection, Fr. objection, Latin.]
1. The act of presenting any thing in opposition.
2. Criminal charge.
Speak on, Sir,
I dare your worst objections. Shakef. Henry VIII.
3. Adverse argument.
There is ever between all estates a secret war. I know well this speech is the objection and not the decision; and that it is after refused. Bacon's War with Spain.
Whoever makes such objections against an hypothesis, hath a right to be heard, let his temper and genius be what it will. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. Fault found.
I have shewn your verses to some, who have made that objection to them. Wells's Letter.
OBJECTIVE. adj. [objectivus, Fr. objectus, Latin.]
1. Belonging to the object; contained in the object.
Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective. Objective certainty is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. The one is in things, the other in our minds. Watts's Logic.
2. Made an object; proposed as an object.
If this one small piece of nature still affords new matter for our discovery, when should we be able to search out the vast treasures of objective knowledge that lies within the compass of the universe? Hale's Origin of Man.
OBJECTIVELY. adv. [from objective.]
1. In manner of an object.
This may fitly be called a determinate idea, when, such as it is at any time objectively in the mind, it is annexed, and without variation determined to an articulate sound, which is to be steadily the sign of that very same object of the mind. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.
2. In a state of opposition.
The basilisk should be destroyed, in regard he first receiveth the rays of his antipathy and venomous emulsi, which objectively move his sense. Bacon's V. Err.
OBJECTIVENESS. n. f. [from objective.] The state of being an object.
Is there such a motion or objectiveness of external bodies, which produceth light? The faculty of light is fitted to receive that impression or objectiveness, and that objectiveness fitted to that faculty. Hale's Origin of Man.
OBJECTOR. n. f. [from object.] One who offers objections; one who raises difficulties.
But these objectors must the cause upbraid,
That has not mortal man, immortal made. Bladen.
Let the objectors consider, that these irregularities must have come from the laws of mechanism. Bentley's Serm.
OBITU. [a corruption of obit, or obit.] Funeral obsequies. Asp.
TO OBJURGATE. v. a. [objurgo, Latin.] To chide; to reprove.
OBJURCA'TION. n. f. [objurgatio, Lat.] Reproof; reprehension.
If there be no true liberty, but all things come to pass by inevitable necessity, then what are all interrogations and objurgations, and reprehensions and expostulations? Bacon.
OBJURGATORY. adj. [objurgatorius, Latin.] Reprehensory; culpatory; chiding.
OBLA'TE. adj. [oblatus, Latin.] Flatted at the poles. Used of a spheroid.
By gravitation bodies on this globe will press towards its center, though not exactly thither, by reason of the spheroid.

O B L

- spheroidal figure of the earth, arising from its diurnal rotation about its axis. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
OBLATION. n. f. [oblation, Fr. oblatus, Latin.] An offering; a sacrifice; any thing offered as an act of worship or reverence. With that the looked upon the picture before her, and straight sigh'd, and straight tears followed, as if the idol of duty ought to be honoured with such oblations. Sidney.
Many conceive in this oblation, not a natural but a civil kind of death, and a separation from the world. Brown.
The will gives worth to the oblation, as to God's acceptance, sets the poorest giver upon the same level with the richest. South's Sermons.
I wish
The kind oblation of a falling tear. Dryden.
Behold the coward, and the brave,
All make oblations at this shrine. Swift's Poems.
OBLI'GATION. n. f. [obligatio, Lat.] Delight; pleasure.
TO OBLIGATE. v. a. [obligo, Latin.] To bind by contract or duty.
OBLIGATION. n. f. [obligatio, from oblige, Lat. obligation, Fr.]
1. The binding power of any oath, vow, duty; contract.
Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
There was no means for him as a christian, to satisfy all obligations both to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace. Bacon's Henry VII.
The better to satisfy this double obligation, you have early cultivated the genius you have to arms. Dryden.
No ties can bind, that from constraint arise, Granville.
Where either's forc'd, all obligation dies.
2. An act which binds any man to some performance.
The heir of an obliged person is not bound to make restitution, if the obligation pass'd only by a personal act; but if it pass'd from his person to his estate, then the estate passes with all its burthen. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
3. Favour by which one is bound to gratitude.
Where is the obligation of any man's making me a present of what he does not care for himself? L'Estrange.
So quick a sense did the Israelites entertain of the merits of Gideon, and the obligation he had laid upon them, that they tender him the regal and hereditary government of that people. South's Sermons.
OBLIGATORY. adj. [obligatione, Fr. from oblige, Latin.] Imposing an obligation; binding; coercive; with to or on.
And concerning the lawfulness, not only permissively, but whether it be not obligatory to Christian princes and states. Bac.
As long as the law is obligatory, so long our obedience is due. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
A people long us'd to hardships, look upon themselves as creatures at mercy, and that all impositions laid on them by a stronger hand, are legal and obligatory. Swift.
If this present is obligatory on them, it is contrary to acts of parliament, and therefore void. Swift.
TO OBLIGE. v. a. [oblige, Fr. oblige, Latin.]
1. To bind; to impose obligation; to compel to something.
Religion oblige men to the practice of those virtues which conduce to the preservation of our health. Tillotson.
The law must oblige in all precepts, or in none. If it oblige in all, all are to be obeyed; if it oblige in none, it has no longer the authority of a law. Rogers, Serm. 15.
2. To indebted; to lay obligations of gratitude.
He that depends upon another, must Oblige his honour with a boundless trust. Waller.
Since love oblige not, I from this hour
Assume the right of man's despotic power. Dryden.
Vain wretched creature, how art thou mislead,
To think thy wit these godlike notions breed!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But drop from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith sprung the light.
Thus man by his own strength to heaven wou'd soar,
And wou'd not be oblig'd to God for more. Dryden.
When int'rest calls off all her sneaking train,
When all th' oblig'd desert, and all the vain,
She waits or to the scaffold or the cell. Pope.
To those hills we are oblig'd for all our metals, and with them for all the conveniences and comforts of life. Bentley.
3. To please; to gratify.
A great man gets more by obliging his inferior, than by disdaining him; as a man has a greater advantage by sowing and dressing his ground, than he can have by trampling upon it. South's Sermons.
Some natures are so four and so ungrateful, that they are never to be obliged. L'Estrange.
Happy the people, who preserve their honour
By the same duties that oblige their prince! Add. Cate.
OBLI'GEE. n. f. [from oblige.] The person bound by a legal or written contract.
OBLI'GEMENT. n. f. [obligement, French.] Obligation.

O B L

- I will not resist, whatever it is, either of divine or human obligation, that you lay upon me. Milton's Education.
Let this fair prince's but one minute stay,
A look from her will your obligements pay. Dryden.
OBLI'GER. n. f. He who binds by contract.
OBLI'GING. part. adj. [obligens, Fr. from oblige.] Civil; compliant; respectful; engaging.
Nothing could be more obliging and respectful than the lion's letter was, in appearance; but there was death in the true intent. L'Estrange, Fab. 54.
Monsieur Strozzi has many curiosities, and is very obliging to a stranger who desires the sight of them. Addison.
Obliging creatures! make me see
All that disgrac'd my betters, met in me. Pope.
So obliging that he ne'er oblig'd. Pope.
OBLI'GINGLY. adv. [from obliging.] Civilly; complaisantly.
Eugenius informs me very obligingly, that he never thought he should have disliked any passage in my paper. Addison.
I see her taste each nauseous draught,
And so obligingly am caught;
I bless the hand from whence they came,
Nor dare distort my face for shame. Swift's Miscell.
OBLI'GINGS. n. f. [from obliging.]
1. Obligation; force.
They look into them not to weigh the obligings, but to quarrel the difficulty of the injunctions; not to direct practice, but excuse prevarications. Deacy of Piety.
2. Civility; complaisance.
OBLIQUA'TION. n. f. [obliquatio, from oblique, Latin.] Declination from perpendicularity; obliquity.
The change made by the obliquation of the eyes, is least in colours of the densest than in thin substances. Newt. Opt.
OBLIQUE. adj. [oblique, Fr. obliquus, Latin.]
1. Not direct; not perpendicular; not parallel.
One by his view
Mought deem him born with ill-dispos'd skies,
When oblique Saturn sat in the house of th' agonies. Fairy Q.
If found be stopped and repercuss'd, it cometh about on the other side in an oblique line. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
May they not pity us, condemn'd to bear
The various heav'n of an oblique sphere;
While by fix'd laws, and with a just return,
They feel twelve hours that shade, for twelve that burn. Prior.
Bavaria's stars must be accus'd which throne
That fatal day the mighty work was done, Prior.
With rays oblique upon the gallic sun.
It has a direction oblique to that of the former motion. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
Criticks form a general character from the observation of particular errors, taken in their own oblique or imperfect views; which is as unjust, as to make a judgment of the beauty of a man's body, from the shade it casts in such and such a position. Notes on the Odyssey.
2. Not direct. Used of sense.
Has he given the lie
In circle, or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel; you must challenge him. Shakef.
3. [In grammar.] Any case in nouns except the nominative.
OBLI'QUELY. adv. [from oblique.]
1. Not directly; not perpendicularly.
Of meridian altitude, it hath but twenty-three degrees, so that it plays but obliquely upon us, and as the sun doth about the twenty-third of January. Brown's Polar Err.
Declining from the noon of days,
The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray. Po. Ra. Locke.
2. Not in the immediate or direct meaning.
His discourse tends obliquely to the detracting from others, or the extolling of himself. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 255.

contract, which has rendered them part of the Devil's possession, and contrive how they may obliterate that reproach, and disentangle their mortgaged souls. Dancy of Pity.

These simple ideas, the understanding can no more refuse to have, or alter, or blot them out, than a mirror can refuse, alter, or obliterate the images, which the objects set before it produce. Locke.

OBLITERATION. n. f. [obliteratio, Latin.] Effacement; extinction.

Considering the casualties of wars, transigrations, especially that of the general flood, there might probably be an obliteration of all those monuments of antiquity that ages precedent at some time have yielded. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

OBLIVION. n. f. [oblivio, Latin.]

1. Forgetfulness; cessation of remembrance.

Water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

Thou shouldst have heard many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion, and thou return unexperienced to thy grave. Shaksp. Taming of the Shrew.

Knowledge is made by oblivion, and to purchase a clear and warrantable body of truth, we must forget and part with much we know. Brown's Vulgar Err. Pref.

Can they imagine, that God has therefore forgot their sins, because they are not willing to remember them? Or will they measure his pardon by their own oblivion. South.

Among our crimes oblivion may be set;
But 'tis our king's perfection to forget. Dryden.

2. Amnesia; general pardon of crimes in a state.

By the act of oblivion, all offences against the crown, and all particular trespasses between subject and subject, were pardoned, remitted, and utterly extinguished. Davies.

OBLIVIOUS. adj. [oblivius, Latin.] Causing forgetfulness.

Raze out the written troubles of the brain,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom. Shakspere's Macbeth.

Exult to see the crowding ghosts descend
Unnumber'd; well aveng'd, they quit the cares
Of mortal life, and drink th' oblivious lake. Philips.

Oh born to see what none can see awake!
Behold the wonders of th' oblivious lake. Pope's Dunci.

OBLONG. adj. [oblongus, Fr. oblongus, Latin.] Longer than broad; the same with a rectangle parallelogram, whose sides are unequal. Harr.

The best figure of a garden I esteem an oblong upon a descent.
Every particle, supposing them globular or not very oblong, would be above nine million times their own length from any other particle. Temple's Miscell.

OBLONGLY. adv. [from oblong.] In an oblong direction.

The surface of the temperate climates is larger than it would have been, had the globe of our earth or of the planets, been either spherical, or oblongly spheroidal. Cheyne.

OBLONGNESS. n. f. [from oblong.] The state of being oblong.

O'BLQUY. n. f. [obliquus, Latin.]

1. Cenforious speech; blame; slander; reproach.

Reasonable moderation hath freed us from being deservedly subject unto that bitter kind of obloquy, whereby as the church of Rome doth, under the colour of love towards those things which be harmless, maintain extremely most hurtful corruptions; so we peradventure might be upbraided, that under colour of hatred towards those things that are corrupt, we are on the other side as extreme, even against most harmless ordinances. Hobbes, b. iv. f. 14.

Here new aspersions, with new obloquies,
Are laid on old deities. Daniel's Civil War.

Cause thou with impious obloquy condemn
The just decree of God, pronounced and sworn? Milton.

Shall names that made your city the glory of the earth, be mentioned with obloquy and detraction? Adams.

Every age might perhaps produce one or two true genius, if they were not sunk under the censure and obloquy of plodding, servile, imitating pedants. Swift.

2. Cause of reproach; disgrace. Not proper.

My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i'th' world
In me to lose. Shakspere's All's well that ends well.

OBMUTE SCENCE. n. f. [from obmutus, Latin.] Loss of speech.

A vehement fear often produceth obmutescence. Brown.

OBNOXIOUS. n. f. [obnoxius, Latin.]

1. Subject.

I propound a character of justice in a middle form, between the speculative discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers, which are tied and obnoxious to their particular laws. Bacon's Holy War.

2. Liable to punishment.

O B S

All are obnoxious, and this faulty land,
Like fainting Hester, does before you stand, Watching your sceptre. Waller.

We know ourselves obnoxious to God's severe justice, and that he is a God of mercy and hatred sin; and therefore that we might not have the least suspicion of his unwillingness to forgive, he hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences. Cadogan's Sermon.

Thy name, O Varus, if the kinder poets
Preferve our plains, and shield the Mantuan towers,
Obnoxious by Cremona's neighb'ring crime,
The wings of swans, and stronger pinion'd rhyme Shall raise aloft. Dryd.

3. Liable; exposed.

Long hostility had made their friendship weak in itself, and more obnoxious to jealousies and distrusts. Hayward.

But what will not ambition and revenge
Decend to? who aspires, must down as low
As high he soar'd; obnoxious first or last,
To basest things. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To dews obnoxious on the grassy floor.

OBNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obnoxius.] Subjection; liability to punishment.

OBNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from obnoxius.] In a state of subjection; in the state of one liable to punishment.

OBSCENE. adj. [obscene, Fr. obscenus, Latin.]

1. Immodest; not agreeable to chastity of mind; causing lewd ideas.

Chemos th' obscene dread of Meab's fons. Milton.

Words that were once chaste, by frequent use grow obscene and uncleanly. Waller's Leges.

2. Offensive; disgusting.

A girdle foul with grease binds his obscene attire. Dryden.

Home as they went, the sad discourse renew'd,
Of the relentless dame to death pursu'd,
And of the fight obscene to lately view'd. Dryden.

3. Inauspicious; ill omened.

Care shuns thy walks, as at the cheerful light
The groaning ghosts, and birds obscene take flight. Dryd.

It is the sun's fate like your's, to be displeasing to owls and obscene animals, who cannot bear his lustre. Pope's Lett.

OBSCURELY. adv. [from obscure.] In an impure and unchaste manner.

OBSCURENESS. n. f. [from obscure.] Impurity of thought or language; unchastity; lewdness.

OBSCURITY. n. f. [from obscure.] Obscurity; lewdness.

Mr. Cowley asserts plainly, that obscenity has no place in wit. Dryden.

Those fables were tempered with the Italian severity, and free from any note of infamy or obscenity. Dryden.

Thou art wickedly devout,
In Tiber ducking thrice by break of day,
To wash th' obscenities of night away. Dryden.

No pardon vile obscenity should find,
Tho' wit and art conspire to move your mind. Pope.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuration, Lat.]

1. The act of darkening.

As to the sun and moon, their obscuration or change of colour happens commonly before the eruption of a fiery mountain. Barrow.

2. A state of being darkened.

OBSCURE. adj. [obscurus, Fr. obscurus, Latin.]

1. Dark; unlightened; gloomy, hindring light.

Who's curst his father or mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness. Prov. xx. 25.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark unbottom'd infinite abyss,
And thro' the palpable obscure find out
His uncouth way? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Living in the dark.

The obscure bird clamour'd the live-long night. Shaksp.

3. Not easily intelligible; abstruse; difficult.

I explain some of the most obscure passages, and those which are most necessary to be understood, and this according to the manner wherein he used to express himself. Dryd.

Not noted; not obtrusive.

4. He says, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose, that is in the dark.

TO OBSCURE. v. a. [obscurus, Latin.]

1. To darken; to make dark.

Sudden the thunder blackens all the skies,
And the winds whistle, and the furies roll
Mountains on mountains, and obscure the pole. Pope.

2. To

2. To make less visible.

They are all couched in a pit hard by Herne's oak, with obscured lights; which at the very instant of Falstaff's and our meeting, they will at once display to the night. Shaksp.

What must I hold a candle to my flames?
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why, 'tis an office of discovery, love, Shaksp. M. of Venice.

And I should be obscured by him from God,
Thinking by this retirement to obscure himself from God,
He hath sent his only begotten son into the world, by his dismal sufferings and cursed death, to expiate our offences. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

3. To make less intelligible.

By private content it hath been used in dangerous times to obscure writings, and make it hard to be read by others not acquainted with the intrigue. Holder.

There is scarce any duty which has been so obscured by the writings of learned men, as this. Waller.

4. To make less glorious, beautiful, or illustrious.

Think't thou, vain spirit, thy glories are the fame,
And sett'st not in obscure thy godlike frame?
I know thee now by thy ungrateful pride,
That shows me what thy faded looks did hide. Dryden.

OBSCURELY. adv. [from obscure.]

1. Not brightly; not luminously.

2. Out of sight; privately; without notice; not conspicuously.

Such was the rise of this prodigious fire,
Which in mean buildings first obscurely bred,
From thence did soon to open streets aspire. Dryden.

There live retir'd,
Content thyself to be obscurely good. Addison's Cato.

Let him go, purified by silent wrath,
Meet unexpected daggers in his way,
And in some distant land obscurely die. Irene.

3. Not clearly; not plainly.

OBSCURENESS. n. f. [obscuritas, Lat. obscurité, Fr.]

OBSCURITY. n. f. [from obscure.]

1. Darkness; want of light.

Lo! a day of darkness and obscurity, tribulation and anguish, upon the earth. Esther xi. 8.

Should Cynthia quit thee, Venus, and each star,
It would not form one thought dark as mine are:
I could lend them obscurer now, and say,
Out of myself there should be no more day. Dennis.

2. Unnoticed state; privacy.

You are not for obscurity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind. Dryd.

3. Darkness of meaning.

Not to mention that obscurer, that attends prophetic raptures, there are divers things knowable by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure.

That this part of sacred scripture had difficulties in it: many causes of obscurity did readily occur to me. Locke.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the indeterminate confusion of a negative idea, wherein I know I do not comprehend all I would, it being too large for a finite capacity. Locke.

OBSCURATION. n. f. [obscuratio, from obscurus, Lat.] Intreaty; supplication.

That these were comprehended under the sacra, is manifest from the old form of obscuration. Stillingfleet.

OBSEQUES. n. f. [obseques, French.] I know not whether this word be not anciently mistaken for exequies, exequies, Latin: this word, however, is apparently derived from obsequium.

1. Funeral rites; funeral solemnities.

There was Dorilaus valiantly requiring his friends help, in a great battle deprived of life, his obsequies being not more solemnized by the tears of his partakers, than the blood of his enemies. Sidney, b. ii.

Fair Juliet, that with angels doth remain,
Accept this latest favour at my hand;
That living honour'd thee, and being dead,
With fun'ral obsequies adorn thy tomb. Shaksp.

These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies. Shaksp.

I spare the widows tears, their woful cries,
And howling at their husbands obsequies;
How Theius at these fun'erals did assist,
And with what gifts the mourning dames dismiss. Dryden.

I will, myself,
Be the chief mourner at his obsequies. Dryden.

Alas! poor Poll, my Indian talker dies,
Go birds and celebrate his obsequies. Creech.

2. It is found in the singular, perhaps more properly.

Or tune a song of victory to me,
Or to thyself, sing thine own obsequy. Crasshaw.

Him I'll solemnly attend,
With silent obsequy and funeral train,
Home to his father's house. Milton's Agonistes.

O B S

OBSEQUIOUS. adj. [from obsequium, Latin.]

1. Obedient; compliant; not resisting.

Adore not so the rising son, that you forget the father, who raised you to this height; nor be you so obsequious to the father, that you give just cause to the son to suspect that you neglect him. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

At his command th' up-rooted hills retir'd
Each to his place; they heard his voice, and went Obsequious. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I follow'd her; she what was honour knew,
And with obsequious majesty, approv'd
My pleaded reason. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

A genial cherishing heat acts so upon the fit and obsequious matter, as to organize and fashion it according to the exigencies of its own nature. Boyle.

His servants weeping,
Obsequious to his orders, bear him hither. Add. Cato.

The vote of an assembly, which we cannot reconcile to public good, has been conceived in a private brain, afterwards supported by an obsequious party. Swift.

2. In Shakspere it seems to signify, funeral; such as the rites of funerals require.

Your father lost a father;
That father his; and the survivor bound
In filial obligation, for some term,
To do obsequious sorrow. Shaksp. Hamlet.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.]

1. Obediently; with compliance.

They rise, and with respectful awe,
At the word giv'n, obsequiously withdraw. Dryden.

We cannot reasonably expect, that any one should readily and obsequiously quit his own opinion, and embrace ours with a blind resignation. Locke.

2. In Shakspere it signifies, with funeral rites; with reverence for the dead.

I a while obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster. Shaksp. R. III.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obsequious.] Obedience; compliance.

They apply themselves both to his interest and humour, with all the arts of flattery and obsequiousness, the surest and the readiest ways to advance a man. South's Sermons.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious, Lat.] Remarkable; eminent; such as may deserve notice.

They do bury their dead with obsequious ceremonies. Abbot.

These proprieties affixed unto bodies from considerations deduced from east, west, or those obsequious points of the sphere, will not be justified from such foundations. Brown.

I took a just account of every obsequious circumstance of the earth, stone, metal, or other matter, from the surface quite down to the bottom of the pit, and entered it carefully into a journal. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The great and more obsequious occasions of exercising our courage, occur but seldom. Rogers.

OBSEQUIOUSLY. adv. [from obsequious.] In a manner worthy of note.

It is prodigious to have thunder in a clear sky, as is obsequiously recorded in some histories. Brown's Vulgar Err.

OBSEQUIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obsequious, Fr. obsequiosus, Latin.]

1. Respect; ceremonial reverence.

In the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do obsequious on the morn of May. Shakspere.

Arcite left his bed, resolv'd to pay
Obsequious to the month of merry May. Dryden.

2. Religious rite.

Some represent to themselves the whole of religion as consisting in a few easy obsequies, and never lay the least restraint on the business or diversions of this life. Rogers.

3. Attentive practice.

Use all th' obsequious of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent
To please his grandam. Shaksp. M. of Venice.

If the divine laws were proposed to our obsequies, with no other motive than the advantages attending it, they would be little more than an advice. Rogers, Sermon 1.

4. Rule of practice.

There are other strict obsequies;
As, not to see a woman. Shaksp. L. Labours Lost.

5. Careful obedience.

We must attend our creator in all those ordinances which he has prescribed to the obsequies of his church. Rogers.

6. Observation; attention.

There can be no observation or experience of greater certainty, as to the increase of mankind, than the strict and vigilant obsequies of the calculations and registers of the bills of births and deaths. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

7. Obedient regard.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and obsequies abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him. Waller.

- Love rigid honesty
And strict observance of impartial laws. Refcommen.
OBSERVANT. adj. [observans, Latin.]
1. Attentive; diligent; watchful.
These writers, which gave themselves to follow and imitate others, were observant spectators of those matters they admired. Raleigh's History of the World.
Wandering from clime to clime observant stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.
2. Obedient; respectful.
We are told how observant Alexander was of his master Aristotle. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.
3. Respectfully attentive.
She now observant of the parting rays,
Eyes the calm sun-set of thy various day. Pope.
4. Meanly dutiful; submissive.
How could the most base men attain to honour but by such an observant slavish course. Raleigh.
OBSERVANT. n. f. [This word has the accent on the first syllable in Shakespeare.] A slavish attendant. Not in use.
These kind of knaves in this plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty filky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, from observe, Lat. observatio, Fr.]
1. The act of observing, noting, or remarking.
These cannot be infused by observation, because they are the rules by which men take their first apprehensions and observations of things; as the being of the rule must be before its application to the thing directed by it. South's Sermon.
The rules of our practice are taken from the conduct of such persons as fall within our observation. Regers.
2. Notion gained by observing; note; remark; animadversion.
In matters of human prudence, we shall find the greatest advantage by making wise observations on our conduct, and of the events attending it. Watts's Logic.
OBSERVATOR. n. f. [observateur, Fr. from observe, Lat.] One that observes; a remarker.
The observator of the bills of mortality, hath given us the best account of the number that late plagues have swept away. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
She may be handsome, yet be chaste, you say,— Good observator, not so fast away. Dryden.
OBSERVATORY. n. f. [observatoire, French.] A place built for astronomical observations.
Another was found near the observatory in Greenwich Park. Woodward on Fossils.
TO OBSERVE. v. a. [observare, Fr. observe, Latin.]
1. To watch; to regard attentively.
Remember, that as thine eye observes others, so art thou observed by angels and by men. Taylor.
2. To find by attention; to note.
If our idea of infinity be got from the power we observe in ourselves, of repeating without end our own ideas, it may be demanded why we do not attribute infinity to other ideas, as well as these of space and duration. Locke.
One may observe them discourse and reason pretty well, of several other things, before they can tell twenty. Locke.
3. To regard or keep religiously.
A night to be much observed unto the Lord, for bringing them out of Egypt. Ex. xii. 42.
4. To obey; to follow.
TO OBSERVE. v. n.
1. To be attentive.
Observing men may form many judgments by the rules of similitude and proportion, where causes and effects are not entirely the same. Watts's Logic.
2. To make a remark.
Wherever I have found her notes to be wholly another's, which is the case in some hundreds, I have barely quoted the true proprietor, without observing upon it. Pope's Lett.
OBSERVER. n. f. [from observe.]
1. One who looks vigilantly on persons and things; close remaker.
He reads much;
He is a great observer; and he looks Quite thro' the deeds of men. Shakespeare, Jul. Caesar.
Angelo,
There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to th' observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Careful observers may forestall the hour,
By sure prognostics when to dread a show'r. Swift.
2. One who looks on; the beholder.
If a slow pac'd star had stol'n away,
From the observer's markings, he might stay
Three hundred years to see't again. Donne.
Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and therefore, if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of objects. South's Sermons.

3. One who keeps any law or custom or practice.
Many nations are superstitious, and diligent observers of old customs, which they receive by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles. Spenser on Ireland.
The king after the victory, as one that had been bred under a devout mother, and was in his nature a great observer of religious forms, caused Te Deum to be solemnly sung in the presence of the whole army upon the place. Dean.
He was so strict an observer of his word, that no consideration whatever could make him break it.
Himself often read useful discourses to his servants on the Lord's day, of which he was always a very strict and solemn observer. Asterbury's Sermon.
OBSERVINGLY. adv. [from observing.] Attentively; carefully.
There is some foul of goodness in things evil.
Would men observingly distil it out. Shakespeare, Henry V.
OBSERVATION. n. f. [observatio, Latin.]
1. The act of being.
2. The first attack of Satan, antecedent to possession.
OBSERVATIONAL. adj. [observationalis, Lat.] Belonging to a siege. Di.
OBSCURE. adj. [obscurus, Lat.] Worn out of use; disused; unfashionable.
Obscure words may be laudably revived, when either they are more founding, or more significant than those in practice. Dryden's Juvenal Ded.
What if there be an old dormant statute or two against him, are they not now obsolete?
OBSCURITY. n. f. [from obscurus.] State of being worn out of use; unfashionableness.
OBSCURE. n. f. [obscurus, Fr. obscurum, Lat.] Something opposed; hindrance; obstruction.
Conscience is a blushing shame-fac'd spirit,
That mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills
One full of obstacles. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
If all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe reverence and due of birth, Shakespeare, R. III.
Disparity in age seems a greater obstacle to an intimate friendship than inequality of fortune. For the humourous, business, and diversions, of young and old, are generally very different. Collier on Friendship.
Some conjectures about the formation of land-hills, the origin of mountains and islands, I am obliged to look into that they may not remain as obstacles to the less skillful. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
What more natural and usual obstacle to those who take voyages, than winds and storms. Pope.
OBSTETRICIAN. n. f. [from obstetricor, Lat.] The office of a midwife.
OBSTETRIC. adj. [from obstetricor, Lat.] Midwifery; befitting a midwife; doing the midwife's office.
There all the learn'd shall at the labour stand,
And Douglas lend his soft obstetric hand. Dunbar, b. iv.
OBSTINACY. n. f. [obstinatio, Fr. obstinatio, Lat. from obstinate.] Stubbornness; contumacy; pertinacity; perisistence.
Chusing rather to use all extremities, which might drive men to desperate obstinacy, than to apply moderate remedies. King Charles.
Most writers use their words loosely and uncertainly, and do not make plain and clear deductions of words one from another, which were not difficult to do, did they not find it convenient to shelter their ignorance, or obstinacy, under the obscurity of their terms. Locke.
What crops of wit and honesty appear,
From spleen, from obstinacy, hate or fear. Pope's Ep.
OBSTINATE. adj. [obstinatus, Lat.] Stubborn; contumacious; fixed in resolution. Absolutely used, it has an ill sense; but relatively, it is neutral.
The queen is obstinate,
Stubborn to justice, apt t' accuse it, and Disdainful to be try'd by't. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
Yield,
Except you mean with obstinate repulse, Shakespeare.
To slay your sov'reign. Shakespeare.
I have known great cures done by obstinate resolutions of drinking no wine. Temple.
Her father did not fail to find
In all she spoke, the greatness of her mind;
Yet thought she was not obstinate to die,
Nor deem'd the death she promis'd was so nigh. Dryden.
Look on Simo's mate;
No as for meek, no as for obstinate. Pope's Ep. ii.
OBSTINATELY. adv. [from obstinate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; with unshaken determination.
Pembroke abhorred the war as obstinately, as he loved hunting and hawking. Clarendon, b. ii.
A Greek made himself their prey,
T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
To die undaunted, or to circumvent, Dryden.

Whom it pleases him by choice, Milton's Aeneid.
TO OBSTRUCT. v. a. [obstruere, Lat.]
1. To hinder; to be in the way of; to block up; to bar.
He them beholding, soon
Comes down to see their city, ere the tow'r Obtrude heav'n-tow'rs. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Fat people are most subject to weakness in fevers, because the fat, melted by the feverish heat, obstructs the small canals. Arbutnot on Aliments.
2. To oppose; to retard.
OBSTRUCTER. n. f. [from obstruct.] One that hinders or opposes.
OBSTRUCTION. n. f. [obstructionis, Lat. obstructio, Fr. from obstruere.]
1. Hindrance; difficulty.
Sure God by these discoveries did design,
That his clear light thro' all the world should shine;
But the obstruction from that discord springs,
The prince of darkness makes 'twixt Christian kings. Denb.
2. Obstacle; impediment; that which hinders.
All obstructions in parliament, that is, all freedom in differing in votes, and debating matters with reason and candour, must be taken away. King Charles.
In his winter quarters the king expected to meet with all the obstructions and difficulties his enraged enemies could lay in his way. Clarendon, b. viii.
Whenever a popular assembly free from obstructions, and already possessed of more power than an equal balance will allow, shall continue to think that they have not enough, I cannot see how the same causes can produce different effects among us, from what they did in Greece and Rome. Swift.
3. [In physics.]
The blocking up of any canal in the human body, so as to prevent the flowing of any fluid through it, on account of the increased bulk of that fluid, in proportion to the diameter of the vessel. Quincy.
4. In Shakespeare it once signifies something heaped together.
Aye but to die, and go we know not where;
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become A kneaded clod. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
OBSTRUCTIVE. adj. [obstructivus, Fr. from obstruere.] Hindering; causing impediment.
Having thus separated this doctrine of God's predetermining all events from three other things confounded with it, it will now be discernible how noxious and obstructive this doctrine is to the superstrucing all good life. Hammond.
OBSTRUCTIVE. n. f. Impediment; obstacle.
The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification, and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.
OBSTRUENT. adj. [obstruent, Lat.] Hindering; blocking up.
OBSTRUENTIA. n. f. [obstruentia, Latin.] The act of inducing stupidity, or interruption of the mental powers.
OBSTRUENTIA. adj. [from obstruentia, Lat.] Obstructing the mental powers; stupidity.
The force of it is obstructive, and no other. Abbot.
TO OBTAIN. v. a. [obtinere, Fr. obtinere, Latin.]
1. To gain; to acquire; to procure.
May be that I may obtain children by her, Gen. xvi. 2.
We have obtained an inheritance. Eph. i. 11.
Whatever once is denied them, they are certainly not to obtain by crying. Locke's Education.
The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression, which is the nutritious juice rendered somewhat more oleaginous. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To impetrate; to gain by the concession or excited kindness of another.
In such our prayers cannot serve us as means to obtain the thing we desire. Hooker, b. v. f. 48.
By his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. Heb. ix. 12.
If they could not be obtained of the proud and crafty tyrant, then to conclude peace with him upon any conditions. Kneller's History of the Turks.
Some pray for riches, riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers for their wealth are slain. Dryden.
The conclusion of the story I forbore, because I could not obtain from myself to shew Abalom unfortunate. Dryden.
TO OBTAIN. v. n.
1. To continue in use.
The Theodosian Code, several hundred years after Justinian's time, did obtain in the western parts of Europe. Bacon.
2. To be established.
Our impious use no longer shall obtain,
Brothers no more, by brothers, shall be slain. Dryden.
The situation of the sun and earth, which the theorist supposes, is so far from being preferable to this which at present obtains, that this hath infinitely the advantage of it. Woodward.
The general laws of fluidity, elasticity, and gravity, obtain in animal and inanimate tubes. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
3. To prevail; to succeed.
There is due from the judge to the advocate, some commendation where causes are fair pleaded; especially towards the side which obtaineth not. Bacon.
OBTAINABLE. adj. [from obtain.] To be procured.
Spirits which come over in distillations, miscible with water, and wholly combustible, are obtainable from plants by previous fermentation. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO OBTEND. v. a. [obtendo, Lat.]
1. To oppose; to hold out in opposition.
2. To pretend; to offer as the reason of any thing.
Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
Obtending heav'n for what'er ill befall. Dryden.
OBTURATION. n. f. [obtusio, Latin.] Darkening; the state of being darkened; the act of darkening; cloudiness.
In every megrim or vertigo, there is an obturation joined with a semblance of turning round. Brown's Nat. Hist.
OBTENSION. n. f. [from obtend.] The act of obtending.
TO OBTUSE. v. a. [obtusare, Latin.] To befech; to suplicate.
Suppliants demand
A truce, with olive branches in their hand;
Obtuse his clemency, and from the plain Beg leave to draw the bodies of their slain. Dryden.
OBTUSTATION. n. f. [obtusatio, Lat. from obtusare.] Supplication; entreaty.
OBTRECTATION. n. f. [obrectio, Lat.] Slander; detraction; calumny.
TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrude, Latin.] To thrust into any place or state by force or imposture; to offer with unreasonable importunity.
It is their torment, that the thing they shun doth follow them, truth, as it were, even obtruding itself into their knowledge, and not permitting them to be so ignorant as they would be. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
There may be as great a vanity in retiring and withdrawing men's conceits from the world, as in obtruding them. Bacon.
Some things are easily granted; the rest ought not to be obtruded upon me with the point of the sword. King Charles.
Who can abide, that against their own doctors fix whole books should, by their fatherhoods of Trent, be under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church?
Why shouldst thou then obtrude this diligence
In vain, where no acceptance it can find? Milton.
Whatever was not by them thought necessary, must not by us be obtruded on, or forced into that catalogue. Flamin.
A cause of common error is the credulity of men; that is, an easy assent to what is obtruded, or believing at first ear what is delivered by others. Brown's V. Err.
The objects of our senses obtrude their particular ideas upon our minds, whether we will or no; and the operations of our minds will not let us be without some obscure notions of them. Locke.
Whether thy great forefathers came From realms that bear Vesputio's name;
For so conjectures would obtrude,
And from thy painted skin conclude. Swift.
OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrude.] One that obtrudes.
They will do justice to the inventors or publishers of the true experiments, as well as upon the obtruders of false ones. Boyle.

OBU

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] The act of obtruding.
No man can think it other than the badge and method of slavery, by savage rudeness and importunate obtrusions of violence, to have the mist of his error and passion dispelled.

OBTRUSIVE. adj. [from obtrudere.] Inclined to force one's self or any thing else, upon others.

Not obvious, not obtrusive, but retir'd
The more desirable. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

TO OBTRUDE. v. a. [obtrude, Latin.] To blunt; to dull; to quell; to deaden.

Avicen countermands letting blood in cholerick bodies, because he esteems the blood a bride of gall, obtruding its acrimony and fierceness. Harvey on Consump.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus, Latin.] The act of obtruding up any thing with something smeared over it.

OBTRUSION. adj. [from obtrusus and angle.] Having angles larger than right angles.

OBTRUSION. n. f. [from obtrusus.]

1. The act of dulling.

2. The state of being dull.

Obtrusion of the senses, internal and external. Harvey.

OBVENTION. n. f. [obventio, Latin.] Something happening not constantly and regularly, but uncertainly; incidental advantage.

When the country grows more rich and better inhabited, the tithes and other obventions, will also be more augmented and better valued. Spen'er on Ireland.

TO OBVERT. v. a. [obvert, Latin.] To turn towards.

The laborant with an iron rod stirred the kindled part of the nitre, that the fire might be more diffused, and more parts might be obverted to the air. Boyle.

A man can from no place behold, but there will be amongst innumerable superfluities, that look some one way, and some another, enough of them obverted to his eye to afford a confused idea of light. Boyle on Colours.

An erect cone placed in an horizontal plane, at a great distance from the eye, we judge to be nothing but a flat circle, if its base be obverted towards us. Watt's Logic.

TO OBVIATE. v. a. [from obviatus, Latin. obvier, Fr.] To meet in the way; to prevent.

To lay down every thing in its full light, so as to obviate all exceptions, and remove every difficulty, would carry me out too far. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

OBVIOUS. adj. [obviatus, Latin.]

1. Meeting any thing; opposed in front to any thing.

To the evil turn

My obvious breast; arming to overcome

By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton.

2. Open; exposed.

Whether such room in nature unpossess'd

Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute

Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far

Down to this habitable, which returns

Light back to them, is obvious to dispute. Milton.

3. Easily discovered; plain; evident; easily found.

Why was the fight

To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd,

So obvious and so easy to be quench'd? Milton.

Entertain'd with solitude,

Where obvious duty ere while appear'd unfought. Milt.

They are such lights as are only obvious to every man of sense, who loves poetry and understands it. Dryden.

I am apt to think many words difficult or obscure, which are obvious to scholars. Swift.

These sentiments, whether they be impress'd on the soul, or arise as obvious reflections of our reason, I call natural, because they have been found in all ages. Rogers.

All the great lines of our duty are clear and obvious; the extent of it understood, the obligation acknowledged, and the wisdom of complying with it freely confessed. Rogers.

OBVIOUSLY. adv. [from obviatus.] Evidently; apparently.

All purely identical propositions obviously and at first blush, contain no instruction. Locke.

OBVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from obviatus.] State of being evident or apparent.

Slight experiments are more easily and cheaply tried; I thought their easiness or obviousness fitter to recommend than depreciate them. Boyle.

TO OBUMBRATE. v. a. [obumbrare, Latin.] To shade; to cloud.

OCC

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villero, dispelled all those clouds which did hang over and obumbrate him.

OBUMBRATION. n. f. [from obumbrare, Latin.] The act of darkening or clouding.

OCCASION. n. f. [occasio, Fr. occasio, Lat.]

1. Occurrence; casualty; incident.

The laws of Christ we find rather mentioned by occasion in the writings of the Apostles, than any solemn thing directly written to comprehend them in legal fort. Robert.

2. Opportunity; convenience.

Unweeting, and unaware of such mishap,

She brought to mischief through occasion,

Where this same wicked villain did me light upon. Pa. R.

That woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her never nurse her child herself, for the will breed it like a fool. Shaksp. As you like it.

Because of the money returned in our backs are we brought in, that he may seek occasion, fall upon us, and take us for bondmen. Gen. xliii. 18.

Use not liberty for an occasion. Gal. v. 13.

Let me not let pass

Occasion which now smiles. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

I'll take th' occasion which he gives to bring

Him to his death. Waller.

With a mind as great as theirs he came

To find at home occasion for his fame,

Where dark confusions did the nations hide. Waller.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their faults, and to sleep again. South.

This one has occasion of observing more than once in several fragments of antiquity, that are still to be seen in Rome. Addison on Italy.

3. Accidental cause.

Have you ever heard what was the occasion and first beginning of this custom? Spen'er on Ireland.

The fair for whom they strove,

Nor thought, when he beheld the fight from far,

Her beauty was th' occasion of the war. Dryden.

4. Reason not cogent, but opportune.

Your own business calls on you,

And you embrace th' occasion to depart. Shakspere.

Concerning ideas lodged in the memory, and upon occasion revived by the mind, it takes notice of them as of a former impression. Locke.

5. Incidental need; casual exigence.

Never matter had

A page so kind, so duteous, diligent,

So tender over his occasions. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

Antony will use his affection where it is:

He married but his occasion here. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

My occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

They who are desirous of a name in painting, should read with diligence, and make their observations of such things as they find for their purpose, and of which they may have occasion. Dryden's Dunciad.

Syllogism is made use of on occasion to discover a fallacy hid in a rhetorical flourish. Locke.

The ancient canons were very well fitted for the occasion of the church in its purer ages. Baker on Learning.

God hath put us into an imperfect state, where we have perpetual occasion of each other's assistance. Swift.

A prudent chief not always must display

His pow'rs in equal ranks, and fair array,

But with th' occasion and the place comply,

Conceal his force, nay, seem sometimes to fly. Pope.

TO OCCASION. v. a. [occasio, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cause casually.

Who can find it reasonable that the soul should, in its retirement, during sleep, never light on any of those ideas it borrowed not from sensation, preserve the memory of no ideas but such, which being occasioned from the body, must needs be less natural to a spirit? Locke.

The good Platonist condemns the foolish thoughts, which a reflection on the prosperous state of his affairs had sometimes occasioned in him. Auriburn on Aliments.

2. To cause; to produce.

I doubt not, whether the great encrease of that disease may not have been occasioned by the custom of much wine introduced into our common tables. Trenchard.

By its stypic quality it affects the nerves, very often occasioning tremors. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. To influence.

If we enquire what it is that occasions men to make several combinations of simple ideas into different modes, and neglect others which have as much an aptness to be combined, we shall find the reason to be the end of language. Locke.

OCCASIONAL. adj. [occasional, Fr. from occasion.]

1. Incidental; casual.

Thus much is sufficient out of Scripture, to verify our explication

OCC

plication of the deluge, according to the Mosaitical history of the flood, and according to many occasional reflections dispersed in other places of scripture concerning it. Barnet.

The ground or occasional original herof, was the amazement and sudden silence the unexpected appearance of wolves does often put upon travellers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Produced by occasion or incidental exigence.

Those letters were not writ to all;

Nor first intended but occasional,

Their absent sermons. Dryd. Hind. and Panth.

OCCASIONALLY. adv. [from occasional.] According to incidental exigence; incidentally.

Authority and reason on her wait,

As one intended first, not after made

Occasionally. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

I have endeavour'd to interweave with the assertions some of the proofs whereon they depend, and occasionally scatter several of the more important observations throughout the work. Woodv. Nat. Hist.

OCCASIONER. n. f. [from occasio.] One that causes, or promotes by design or accident.

She with true lamentations made known to the world, that her new greatness did no way comfort her in respect of her brother's loss, whom she studied all means possible to revenge upon every one of the occasioners. Sidney, b. ii.

Some men will load me as if I were a wilful and resolved occasioner of my own and my subjects miseries. K. Charles.

In case a man dig a pit and leave it open, whereby it happeneth his neighbour's beast to fall therein and perish, the owner of the pit is to make it good, in as much as he was the occasioner of that loss to his neighbour. Sanderson.

OCCREATION. n. f. [occratio, from occare, Latin.] The act of blinding or making blind.

Those places speak of obduration and occreation, so as if the blindness that is in the minds, and hardness that is in the hearts of wicked men, were from God. Sanderson.

OCCIDENT. n. f. [from occidens, Latin.] The west.

The envious clouds are bent

To dim his glory, and to stain the track

Of his bright passage to the occident. Shaksp. R. II.

OCCIDENTAL. adj. [occidentalis, Latin.] Western.

Ere twice in muck and accidental damp,

Moist Helpers hath quench'd his sleepy lamp. Shaksp.

TO OCCIDE. v. a. [occidens, Latin.] To shut up.

They take it up, and roll it upon the earths, whereby occluding the pores they conserve the natural humidity, and so prevent corruption. Brown.

OCCLUSE. adj. [occlusus, Latin.] Shut up; closed.

The appulse is either plenary and occlusus, so as to preclude all passages of breath or voice through the mouth; or else partial and pervious, so as to give them some passages out of the mouth. Holder's Elements of Speech.

OCCUSION. n. f. [from occlusus, Latin.] The act of shutting up.

OCCULT. adj. [occultus, Fr. occultus, Lat.] Secret; hidden; unknown; undiscoversible.

If his occult guilt

Do not itself unkennel in one speech,

It is a damned ghost that we have seen. Shaksp. Ham.

An artist will play a lesson on an instrument without minding a stroke; and our tongues will run divisions in a tune not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere: which effects are to be attributed to some secret act of the soul, which to us is utterly occult, and without the ken of our intellects. Glover, Scet. c. iv.

These instincts we call occult qualities; which is all one with saying that we do not understand how they work. L'Ecl.

These are manifest qualities, and their causes only are occult. And the Aristotelians gave the name of occult qualities not to manifest qualities, but to such qualities only as they supposed to lie hid in bodies, and to be the unknown causes of manifest effects. Newt. Opt.

OCCULTATION. n. f. [occultatio, Latin.]

In astronomy, is the time that a star or planet is hid from our sight, when eclipsed by interposition of the body of the moon, or some other planet between it and us. Harris.

OCC

OCCUPANCY. n. f. [from occupans, Latin.] The act of taking possession.

Of moveables, some are things natural; others, things artificial. Property in the first is gained by occupancy, in the latter by improvement. Warburton on Literary Property.

OCCUPANT. n. f. [occupans, Latin.] He that takes possession of any thing.

Of beasts and birds the property passeth with the possession, and goeth to the occupant; but of civil people not so. Bacon.

TO OCCUPARE. v. a. [occupare, Latin.] To possess; to hold; to take up.

Drunken men are taken with a plain destitution in voluntary motion; for that the spirits of the wine oppress the spirits animal, and occupy part of the place where they are, and so make them weak to move. Bacon's Nat. History.

OCCUPATION. n. f. [from occupatio, Fr. occupatio, Lat.]

1. The act of taking possession.

Spain hath enlarged the bounds of its crown within this last six score years, much more than the Ottomans: I speak not of matches or unions, but of arms, occupations, invasions. Bacon.

2. Employment; business.

Such were the distresses of the then infant world; so incessant their occupations about provision for food, that there was little leisure to commit any thing to writing. Woodv.

In your most busy occupations, when you are never so much taken up with other affairs, yet now and then send up an ejaculation to the God of your salvation. Wake.

3. Trade; calling; vocation.

The red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,

And occupations perish. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

He was of the same craft with them, and wrought, for by their occupation they were tent-makers. Acts xviii. 3.

OCCUPIER. n. f. [from occupare.]

1. A possessor; one who takes into his possession.

If the title of occupiers be good in a land unpeopled, why should it be bad accounted in a country peopled over thinly? Raleigh's Essay.

2. One who follows any employment.

Thy merchandise and the occupiers of thy merchandise, shall fall into the midst of the seas. Ezek. xxvii. 27.

TO OCCUPY. v. a. [occupare, Fr. occupare, Latin.]

The year, without regard to days, ends with an odd day and odd hours, odd minutes and odd seconds of minutes; so that it cannot be measured by any even number of days, hours, or minutes. Holder on Time.

3. Particular; uncouth; extraordinary; not like others; not to be numbered among any class. In a sense of contempt or dislike. Her madnes hath the oddity frame of sense, Such a dependency of thing on thing, As e'er I heard in madnes. Shakef. Measure for Measure.

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white,
To make up my delight,
No odd becoming graces,
Black eyes, or little know not what's in faces. Suckling.

This blue colour being made by nothing else than by reflection of a specular superficies, seems so odd a phenomenon and so difficult to be explained by the vulgar hypothesis of philosophers, that I could not but think it deserved to be taken notice of. Newt. Opt.

When I broke loose from writers who have employed their wit and parts in propagating of vice, I did not question but I should be treated as an odd kind of a fellow. Spectator.

No fool Pythagoras was thought;
He made his lifting scholars stand;
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the music of the spheres. Prior.

ODDLY. adv. [from odd. This word and oddness, should, I think, be written with one d; but the writers almost all combine against it.]

1. Not evenly. 2. Strangely; particularly; unaccountably; uncouthly. How oddly will it found, that I, Must ask my child forgiveness. Shakef. Tempest.

One man is predest with poverty, and looks somewhat oddly upon it. Calder on the Spleen.

The dreams of sleeping men are made up of the waking man's ideas, though for the most part oddly put together. Locke.

This child was near being excluded out of the species of man barely by his shape. It is certain a figure a little more oddly turned had cast him, and he had been executed. Locke.

The real essence of substances we know not; and therefore are so undetermined in our nominal essences, which we make ourselves, that if several men were to be asked concerning some oddly-shaped fetus, whether it were a man or no? it is past doubt, one should meet with different answers. Locke.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

As matters in the clare obscure,
With various light your eyes allure:
A flaming yellow here they spread;
Draw off in blue, or charge in red;
Yet from these colours oddly mix'd,
Your sight upon the whole is fix'd. Prior.

They had seen a great black substance lying on the ground very oddly-shaped. Gulliv. Trav.

Fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped, according to the modification of their constituent salts, or the cavities they are formed in. Bentley's Sermon.

ODDNESS. n. f. [from odd.]

1. The state of being not even. 2. Strangeness; particularity; uncouthness. Coveting to recommend himself to posterity, Cicero begged it as an alms of the historians, to remember his consulship; and observe the oddness of the event; all their histories are lost, and the vanity of his request stands recorded in his own writings. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Pref.

A knave is apprehensive of being discovered; and this habitual concern puts an oddness into his looks. Calder.

My wife fell into a violent disorder, and I was a little discomposed at the oddness of the accident. Swift.

OFFENCE. n. f. [offense, Fr. offense, from offendo, Lat.]

1. Crime; act of wickedness.

Thither with speed their hasty course they ply'd,
Where Christ the Lord, which offences dy'd. Fairfax.
Thou hast stol'n that, which after some few hours
Were thine without offence. Shaksp. Henry IV.

2. A transgression.

If, by the law of nature, every man hath not a power to punish offences against it, I see not how the magistrates of any community can punish an alien of another country. Locke.

3. Injury.

I have given my opinion against the authority of two great men, but I hope without offence to their memories; for I loved them living, and reverence them dead. Dryden.

4. Displeasure given; cause of disgust; scandal.

Giving no offence in any thing, that the ministry be not blamed. 2 Cor. vi. 3.

He remembered the injury of the children of Bean, who had been a snare and an offence unto the people. 1 Mac. iv.

The pleasures of the touch are greater than those of the other senses; as in warming upon cold, or refrigeration upon heat: for as the pains of the touch are greater than the offences of other senses, so likewise are the pleasures. Bacon.

5. Anger; displeasure conceived.

Hardest in every present humour, and making himself brave in his liking, he was content to give them just cause of offence when they had power to make just revenge. Sidney.

6. Attack; act of the assailant.

Courtesy that seems incorporated in his heart, would not be perjured to offer any offence, but only to stand upon the best defensive guard. Sidney.

OFFENSIVE. adj. [offensive and full]. Injurious; giving displeasure.

It seems your most offensive act

Was mutually committed. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

OFFENSIBLE. adj. [from offensive]. Unoffending; innocent.

You are but now cast in his mood, a punishment more in policy than in malice; even so as one would beat his offence-less dog to a right imperious lion. Shaksp. Othello.

TO OFFEND. v. a. [offendo, Latin].

1. To make angry.

If much you note him

You shall offend him, and extend his passion, Feed and regard him not. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Three sorts of men my soul hateth, and I am greatly offended at their life. Eccles. xxv. 2.

The emperor himself came running to the place in his armour, severely reproving them of cowardice who had forsaken the place, and grievously offended with them who had kept such negligent watch. Knolly's Hist. of the Turks.

2. To offend; to attack.

He was fain to defend himself, and withal so to offend him, that by an unlucky blow the poor Philoxenus fell dead at his feet. Sidney.

3. To transgress; to violate.

To injure.

Cheaply you sin, and punish crimes with ease,
Not as th' offend, but th' offenders please. Dryden.

TO OFFEND. v. n.

1. To be criminal; to transgress the law.

This man that of earthly matter maketh graven images, knoweth himself to offend above all others. Wisd. xiv. 13.

Whoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. James ii. 10.

2. To cause anger.

I shall offend, either to detain or give it. Shaksp. Lear.

3. To commit transgression.

Our language is extremely imperfect, and in many instances it offends against every part of grammar. Swift.

OFFENDER. n. f. [from offend].1. A criminal; one who has committed a crime; a transgressor;
a guilty person.

All that watch for iniquity are cut off, that make a man an offender for a word. Is. xxix. 21.

So like a fly the poor offender dies;
But like the wasp, the rich escapes and flies. Denham.

How shall I lose the sin, yet keep the sense,
And love th' offender, yet detest th' offence? Pope.

The confidence of the offender shall be sharper than an avenger's sword. Clarissa.

2. One who has done an injury.

All vengeance comes too short,
Which can pursue th' offender. Shaksp. King Lear.

OFFENDRESS. n. f. [from offender]. A woman that offends.

Virginity murders itself, and should be buried in highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offendress against nature. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

OFFENSIVE. adj. [offensus, Fr. offensus, Lat.].

1. Causing anger; displeasing; disgusting.

Since no man can do ill with a good conscience, the consolation which we herein seem to find is but a meer deceitful

OFF

pleasing of ourselves in error, which at the length must needs turn to our greater grief, if that which we do to please God most, be for the manifold defects thereof offensive unto him.

It shall suffice, to touch such customs of the Irish as seem offensive and repugnant to the good government of the realm.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. Causing pain; injurious.

It is an excellent opener for the liver, but offensive to the stomach. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Some particular acrimony in the stomach sometimes makes it offensive, and which custom at last will overcome. Arbut.

3. Assailant; not defensive.

He recounted the benefits and favours that he had done him, in provoking a mighty and opulent king by an offensive war in his quarrel. Sam.

We enquire concerning the advantages and disadvantages betwixt those military offensive engines used among the ancients, and those of these latter ages. Willm.

OFFENSIVELY. adv. [from offensive].

1. Mischievously; injuriously.

In the least thing done offensively against the good of men, whose benefit we ought to seek for as our own, we plainly show that we do not acknowledge God to be such as indeed he is. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

2. So as to cause uneasiness or displeasure.

A lady had her sight disordered, so that the images in her hangings did appear to her, if the room were not extraordinarily darkened, embellished with several offensively wild colours. Boyle on Colours.

3. By way of attack; not defensively.

OFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from offensive].

1. Injuriousness; mischief.

The muscles of the body, being preserved sound and limber upon the bones, all the motions of the parts might be explicated with the greatest ease and without any offensiveness.

Greav's Muscul.

TO OFFER. v. a. [offero, Lat. offerre, Fr.].1. To present to any one; to exhibit any thing so as that it may be taken or received.

The heathen women under the Mogul, offer themselves to the flames at the death of their husbands. Collin.

Some ideas forwardly offer themselves to all mens understandings; some sort of truths result from any idea, so soon as the mind puts them into propositions. Locke.

Servants placing happiness in strong drink, make court to my young master, by offering him that which they love. Lech.

2. To sacrifice; to immolate; to present as an act of worship.

They offered unto the Lord of the spoil which they had brought, seven hundred oxen. 2 Chron. xv. 11.

He shall offer of it all the fat thereof. Lev. vii. 3.

An holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices. 1 Pet. ii. 5.

Whole herds of offer'd bulls about the fire,
And bristled boars and woolly sheep expire. Dryden.

When a man is called upon to offer up himself to his conscience, and to resign to justice and truth, he should be so far from avoiding the lists, that he should rather enter with inclination, and thank God for the honour. Collin.

3. To bid, as a price or reward.

Nor shouldst thou offer all thy little store,
Will rich Idas yield, but offer more. Dryden.

4. To attempt; to commence.

Lyfimachus armed about three thousand men, and began first to offer violence. 2 Mac. iv. 40.

5. To propose.

In all that great extent wherein the mind wanders in remote speculations, it stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered for its contemplation. Lech.

Our author offers no reason. Lech.

TO OFFER. v. n.

1. To be present; to be at hand; to present itself.

No thought can imagine a greater heart to see and contern danger, where danger would offer to make any wrong term threatening upon him. Sidney, b. ii.

Th' occasion offers, and the youth complies. Dryden.

2. To make an attempt.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land. Bacon.

One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more. Dan. Civ. War.

I would treat the pope and his cardinals roughly, if they offered to see my wife without my leave. Dryden.

3. With at.

I will not offer at that I cannot master. Bacon.

I hope they will take it well that I should offer at a new thing, and could forbear presuming to meddle where any of the learned pens have ever touched before. Gran.

Write down and make signs to him to pronounce them, and guide him by shewing him by the motion of your own lips. Spenser on Ireland.

lips to offer at one of those letters; which being the easiest,
he will stumble upon one of them. Holder.

The masquerade succeeded so well with him, that he would be offering at the shepherd's voice and call too. L'Estrange.

It contains the grounds of his doctrine, and offers at somewhat towards the disproof of mine. Atterbury.

Without offering at any other remedy, we hastily engaged in a war, which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

OFFER. n. f. [offerre, Fr. offerre, Lat.].

1. Proposal of advantage to another.

Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face;
These swell their prospects, and exalt their pride,
When offers are disdain'd, and love deny'd. Pope.

2. First advance.

Force compels this offer.

And it proceeds from policy, not love. —
— Mowbray, you overween to take it so:
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear. Shaksp.

What wouldst beg, Laertes,
That shall not be my offer, not thy asking? Shaksp.

3. Proposal made.

Th' offers he doth make,

Were not for him to give, nor them to take. Daniel.

I enjoined all the ladies to tell the company, in case they had been in the siege and had the same offer made them as the good women of that place, what every one of them would have brought off with her, and have thought most worth the saving. Addison's Spectator.

It carries too great an imputation of ignorance, or folly, to quit and renounce former tenets upon the offer of an argument which cannot immediately be answered. Locke.

4. Price bid; act of bidding a price.

When stock is high, they come between,
Making by second hand their offers;
Then cunningly retire unseen,
With each a million in his coffers. Swift.

5. Attempt; endeavour.

Many motions, though they be unprofitable to expel that which hurteth, yet they are offers of nature, and cause motions by consent; as in groaning, or crying upon pain. Bacon.

It is in the power of every one to make some essay, some offer and attempt, so as to shew that the heart is not idle or insensible, but that it is full and big, and knows itself to be so, though it wants strength to bring forth. South's Serms.

One sees in it a kind of offer at modern architecture, but at the same time that the architect has shewn his dislike of the gothic manner, one may see that they were not arrived at the knowledge of the true way. Addison on Italy.

6. Something given by way of acknowledgment.

Fair streams that do vouchsafe in your cleanness to represent unto me my blubbered face, let the tribute offer of my tears procure your stay a while with me, that I may begin yet at last to find something that pities me. Sidney, b. ii.

OFFERER. n. f. [from offer].

1. One who makes an offer.

2. One who sacrifices, or dedicates in worship.

If the mind of the offerer be good, this is the only thing
God respecteth. Hooker, b. v. f. 34.

When he commanded Abraham to sacrifice Isaac, the place of the offering was not left undetermined, and to the offerer's discretion. South's Sermons.

OFFERING. n. f. [from offer]. A sacrifice; any thing immo-lating, or offered in worship.

Plucking the entrails of an offering forth,
They could not find a heart within the beast. Shaksp.

They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. Shaksp.

When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed. Is. liii. 10.

The gloomy god
Stood mute with awe, to see the golden rod;
Admir'd the destin'd offering to his queen,
A venerable gift so rarely seen. Dryden.

What nations now to Juno's pow'r will pray,
Or offerings on my fluted altars lay? Dryd. Virg.

I'll favour her,
That my awaken'd soul may take her sight,
Renew'd in all her strength, and fresh with life.
An offering fit for heaven. Addison's Cato.

OFFERTORY. n. f. [offertorium, Fr.]. The thing offered; the act of offering.

He went into St. Paul's church, where he made offertory of his standards, and had orizons and Te Deum sung. Bacon.

OFFERTURE. n. f. [from offer]. Offer; proposal of kindness.

A word not in use.

Thou hast prevented us with offertures of thy love, even when we were thine enemies. King Charles.

OFFICE. n. f. [officium, Fr. officium, Latin.].

1. A public charge or employment.

You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself into a power tyrannical. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

OFF

Methought this staff, mine office-badge in court,
Was broke in twain. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. ii.

The infolence of office. Shaksp.

2. Agency; peculiar use.

All things that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office. Shaksp. King Lear.

In this experiment the several intervals of the teeth of the comb do the office of so many prisons, every interval producing the phenomenon of one prison. Newt. Opt.

3. Business; particular employment.

The sun was sunk, and after him the star
Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight upon the earth. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.

4. Act of good or ill voluntarily tendered.

Wolves and bears
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Mrs. Ford, I see you are obsequious in your love, and I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accompaniment, complement, and ceremony of it. Shaksp. Merry IV. of Windsor.

I would I could do a good office between you. Shaksp.

The wolf took this occasion to do the fox a good office. L'Estrange.

You who your pious offices employ
To save the reliques of abandon'd Troy. Dryd. Virg.

5. Act of worship.

This gate
Instructs you how to adore the heavens, and bows you
To morning's holy office. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

6. Formula of devotions.

Whoever hath children or servants; let him take care that they say their prayers before they begin their work: the Lord's prayer, the ten commandments, and the creed, is a very good office for them, if they are not fitted for more regular offices. Taylor's Devotion.

7. Rooms in a house appropriated to particular business.

What do we but draw anew the model
In fewer offices? at least deficit
To build at all. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Let offices stand at distance, with some low galleries to pass from them to the palace itself. Bacon.

8. Place where business is transacted. [Officina, Lat.].

What shall good old York see there,
But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls,
Unpeopled offices, untrodon floors? Shaksp. Rich. II.

Empton and Dudley, though they could not but bear of these scruples in the king's confidence, yet as if the king's soul and his money were in several offices, that the one was not to intermeddle with the other, went on with as great rage as ever. Bacon's Henry VIII.

TO OFFICE. v. a. [from the noun]. To perform; to discharge; to do.

I will be gone, altho'
The air of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

OFFICER. n. f. [officer, French.].

1. A man employed by the publick.

'Tis an office of great worth,
And you an officer fit for the place. Shaksp.

Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

The next morning there came to us the same officer that came to us at first to conduct us to the stranger's house. Bac.

If it should fall into the French hands, all the princes would return to be the several officers of his court. Temple.

As a magistrate or great officer he locks himself up from all approaches. South's Sermons.

Birds of prey are an emblem of rapacious officers. A superior power takes away by violence from them, that which by violence they took away from others. L'Estrange.

2. A commander in the army.

If he did not nimbly ply the spade,
His fury officer ne'er fail'd to crack
His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.

I summon'd all my officers in haste,
All came resolv'd to die in my defence. Dryden.

The bad disposition he made in landing his men, shews him not only to be much inferior to Pompey as a sea officer, but to have had little or no skill in that element. Arb.

3. One who has the power of apprehending criminals.

The thieves are the power of apprehending criminals.
So strongly, that they dare not meet each other;
Each takes his fellow for an officer. Shaksp. Henry IV.

We charge you
To go with us unto the officers. Shaksp. Henry VI.

OFFICERED. adj. [from officer]. Commanded; supplied with commanders.

What could we expect from an army officered by Irish papists and outlaws. Addison's Freeholder.

OFFICIAL.

OFF

OFFICIAL, adj. [official, Fr. from officium.]
 1. Conductive; appropriate with regard to their use.
 In this animal are the guts, the stomach, and other parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, their provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2. Pertaining to a public charge.
 The tribunes
 Endue you with the people's voice. Remains
 That in th' official marks invested, you Anon do meet the senate. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

OFFICIAL, n. f.
 Official is that person to whom the cognizance of causes is committed by such as have ecclesiastical jurisdiction. Ayl.
 A poor man found a priest over familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him before the bishop's official for defamation. Camden.

OFFICIALTY, n. f. [officialité, Fr. from official.] The charge or post of an official.
 The office of an official to an archdeacon. Ayliffe.

TO OFFICIATE, v. a. [from officium.] To give, in consequence of office.
 All her number'd stars that seem to rowl Spaces incomprehensible, for such
 Their distance argues, and their swift return
 Diurnal, merely to officiate light Round this opacous earth, this punctual spot. Milton.

TO OFFICIATE, v. n.
 1. To discharge an office, commonly in worship.
 No minister officiating in the church, can with a good conscience omit any part of that which is commanded by the aforesaid law. Sanderfon.
 Who of the bishops or priests that officiates at the altar, in the places of their sepulchres, ever said we offer to thee Peter or Paul?
 To prove curates no servants, is to rescue them from that contempt which they will certainly fall into under this notion; which considering the number of persons officiating this way, must be very prejudicial to religion. Collier.

2. To perform an office for another.
OFFICIAL, adj. [from officina, a shop.] Used in a shop, or belonging to it: thus official plants and drugs are those used in the shops.

OFFICIALS, adj. [officialis, Fr. officiosus, Lat.]
 1. Kind; doing good offices.
 Yes, not to earth are those bright luminaries Official; but to thee, earth's habitation. Milt. P. Lost.

2. Importunely forward.
 You are too officious
 In her behalf that scorns your services. Shakespeare.
 At Taunton they killed in fury an officious and eager commissioner for the subsidy. Bacon's Henry VII.

Cato, perhaps
 I'm too officious, but my forward cares
 Would fain preserve a life of so much value. Addison.

OFFICIOUSLY, adv. [from officious.]
 1. Importunely forward.
 The most corrupt are most obsequious grown,
 And those they scorn'd, officiously they own. Dryden.

2. Kindly; with unasked kindness.
 To give themselves, not you, an happy year. Dryd.

Let thy goats officiously be nurs'd,
 And led to living streams to quench their thirst. Dryd.

OFFICIOUSNESS, n. f. [from officious.]
 1. Forwardness of civility, or respect, or endeavour. Commonly in an ill sense.
 I shew my officiousness by an offering, though I betray my poverty by the measure. South's Sermon.

2. Service.
 In whom is required understanding as in a man, courage and vivacity as in a lion, service and ministerial officiousness as in the ox, and expedition as in the eagle. Brown's V. Err.

OFFING, n. f. [from off.] The act of steering to a distance from the land.

OFFSET, n. f. [off and set.] Sprout; shoot of a plant.
 They are multiplied not only by the seed, but many also by the root, producing offsets or creeping under ground. Roy.

Some plants are raised from any part of the root, others by offsets, and in others the branches set in the ground will take root.

OFFSCOURING, n. f. [off and scour.] Recrement; part rubbed away in cleaning any thing.
 Thou hast made us as the offscouring and refuse in the midst of the people. Lam. iii. 45.

OFFSPRING, n. f. [off and spring.]
 1. Propagation; generation.
 All things coveting to be like unto God in being ever, that which cannot hereunto attain personally, doth seem to continue itself by offspring and propagation. Hooker.

2. The thing propagated or generated; children; descendants.

OGL

OGL, adj. [ogel, Dutch.] A fly gazer; one who views by side glances.
 Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin;
 This was a charge, that all his heirs did bind,
 And all his offspring view corrupt therein. Davies.

Our future offspring, and our wives are known. Dryd.
 His principal actor is the son of a goddess, not to mention the offspring of other deities. Addison's Spectator.

3. Production of any kind.
 Tho' both fell before their hour,
 Time on their offspring hath no pow'r;
 Nor fire nor fate their bays shall blast,
 Nor death's dark veil their days o'ercast. Denham.

TO OFFUSCATE, v. a. [offusco, Lat. offuscare, Fr.] To dim; to cloud; to darken.
OFFUSCATION, n. f. [from offuscare.] The act of darkening.

OFFT, adv. [oft, Saxon.] Often; frequently; not rarely; not seldom.
 In labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. 2 Cor. ii. 23.

It may be a true faith, for so much as it is; it is one part of true faith, which is oft mistaken for the whole. Hamm.
 Favours to none, to all the smiles extends,
 Oft she rejects, but never once offends. Po. R. Lede.

OFFTEN, adv. [from oft, Saxon.] In the comparative, oftener, superlative, oftneft; Oft; frequently; many times; not seldom.

The queen that bore thee,
 Oftner upon her knees than on her feet,
 Died ev'ry day the liv'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Use a little wine for thy stomach's sake, and thine own infirmities. 1 Tim. v. 23.
 In journeying oft, in perils in the wilderness. 2 Cor. ii. 20.

Who does not more admire Cicero as an author, than as a consul of Rome, and does not oftner talk of the celebrated writers of our own country in former ages, than of any among their contemporaries? Addison's Preface.

OFFTIMES, adv. [often and times.] From the composition of this word it is reasonable to believe, that oft was once an adjective, of which often was the plural; which seems retained in the phrase thine often infirmities. See OFFTEN.
 Frequently; many times; often.

Is our faith in the blessed trinity a matter needless, to be oftentimes mentioned and opened in the principal part of that duty which we owe to God, our public prayer? Hooker.

The difficulty was by what means they could ever arrive to places oftentimes so remote from the ocean. Wood.
 It is equally necessary that there should be a future state, to vindicate the justice of God, and solve the present irregularities of providence, whether the best men be oftentimes only, or always the most miserable. Atterbury.

OFFTIMES, adv. [oft and times.] Frequently; often.
 Oftentimes nothing profits more Than self-esteem, grounded on just and right,
 Well manag'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Oftimes before I hither did resort,
 Charm'd with the conversation of a man
 Who led a rural life. Dryden and Lee.

OGLE, n. f. Is a sort of moulding in architecture, consisting of a round and a hollow: it is almost in the form of an S, and is the same with what Vitruvius calls cimæ. Cima reverfa, is an ogle with the hollow downwards. Harris.

TO OGLE, v. a. [ogel, an eye, Dutch.] To view with side glances, as in fondness; or with a design not to be headed.
 From their high scaffold with a trumpet cheer,
 And ogling all their audience, then they speak. Dryden.

If the female tongue will be in motion, why should it not be set to go right? Could they talk of the different aspects and conjunctions of the planets, they need not be at the pains to comment upon ogles and clandestine marriages. Addison's Guardian, N° 155.

Whom is he ogling yonder? himself in his looking-glass. Martina Scriblerus.

OGLER, n. f. [ogeler, Dutch.] A fly gazer; one who views by side glances.
 Upon the distile of the neck-piece, the whole tribe of oglers stared the fair sex in the neck rather than in the face. Addison's Guardian, N° 100.

Jack was a prodigious ogler; he would ogle you the outside of his eye inward, and the white upward. J. Bull.

OGGIO, n. f. [from olla, Spanish.] A dish made by mingling different kinds of meat; a medley; a hotchpotch.
 These general motives of the common good, I will not so much as once offer up to your lordship, though they have still the upper end; yet, like great ogles, they rather make a shew than provoke appetite. Suckling.

Where is there such an oggle or medley of various opinions in the world again, as those men entertain in their service, without any scruple as to the diversity of their acts and opinions? King Charles.

OIL

He that keeps an open house, should consider that there are ogles & guests, as well as of dishes, and that the liberty of a common table is as good as a tacit invitation to all sorts of intruders. L'Estrange.
OH, interj. An exclamation denoting pain, sorrow, or surprise.

He,
 Like shall acorn'd bear, a churning on,
 Cry'd oh! and mounted. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
 Oh! all the horse have got over the river, what shall we do? Walton's Angler.

My eyes confess it,
 My very action speaks my heart aloud;
 But, the madness of my high attempt Speaks louder yet! Dryden's Spanish Friar.

OIL, n. [oel, Saxon; oleum, Latin.]
 1. The juice of olives expressed.
 Bag pure oil olive beaten for the light. Ex. xxvii. 20.

2. Anyfat, greasy, unctuous, thin matter.
 Imost birds there is only one gland; in which are diversells, ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the tipple of the oil bag. Derham's Physico-Theol.

3. The juices of certain vegetables, expressed or drawn by the still without fermentation, or after the spirit.
 It with chemists called sulphur, is the second of their hypothesis, and of the true five chymical principles. It is an inaimable, unctuous, subtle substance, which usually rises off the spirit. The chemists attribute to this principle all the diversity of colours, and all the beauty and deformity.

Itweetens the acrimony of salts, and by stopping or filling the pores of a mixt body, keeps it longer from corruption, where it abounds. There are two sorts of oil which sm to be mixt with spirit; for it can never be drawn pure, and which will swim upon water, such as oil of antiseptic and vander, which the chemists call essential, and is commonly drawn in a limbeck with store of water: and another kind which probably is mixt with salts; and these will sink in water, such as the oil of guaiacum and cloves. Harris.

After this expressed oil, we made trial of a distilled one; and for that purpose made choice of the common oil or spirit: Boyle.
OIL, v. a. [from the noun.] To smear or lubricate with oil.

The men fell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain ailed. Watten.
 Amber will attract straws thus ailed, it will convert the needles of dials, made either of brass or iron, although they be much ailed, for in those needles confining free upon their center there can be no adhesion. Brown's V. Err.

Swift oils many a spring which Harley moves. Swift.
OILCOLOUR, n. f. [oil and colour.] Colour made by grinding coloured substances in oil.

OILCOLOURS, after they are brought to their due temper, may be preferred long in some degree of softness, kept all the while under water. Boyle.

OILINESS, n. f. [from oily.] Unctuousness; greasiness; quality approaching to that of oil.
 Baid hath fat and succulent leaves; which oiliness, if drawn forth by the sun, will make a very great change. Bacon.

Wine is inflammable; so as it hath a kind of oiliness. Bac.
 Smoke from unctuous bodies and such whose oiliness is evident, he nameth nidor. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Chyle has the same principles as milk, viscosity from the caseous parts, an oiliness from the butyrous parts, and an acidity from the tartareous. Flyer.

The flesh of animals which live upon other animals, is most antiaid; though offensive to the stomach sometimes by reason of their oiliness. Arbutnot on Aliments.

OILMAN, n. f. [oil and man.] One who trades in oils and pickles.

OILSHOP, n. f. [oil and shop.] A shop where oils and pickles are sold.

OILY, adj. [from oil.]
 1. Containing of oil; containing oil; having the qualities of oil.
 The like cloud, if it were oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water and flame, and fire upon oil. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Flame is grosser than gross fire, by reason of the mixture with it of that viscous oily matter, which, being drawn out of the wood and candle, serves for fuel. Digby.

Watry substances are more apt to putrify than oily. Bacon.
 2. Fat; greasy.
 This oily radical is known as well as Paul's;
 Go call him forth. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

OILYRAIN, n. f. A plant.
 The flowers are produced from the wings of the leaves without any footstalk; the flower cup consists of one leaf, divided into five long slender segments; the flower is of one leaf, in shape like those of the fox-glove; the pointal, which rises in the middle of the flower, afterward becomes an oblong four cornered pod, divided into four distinct cells, which are replete with feculent seeds. Miller.

OLD

OLYPALM, n. f.
 It grows in great plenty on the coast of Guiney, as also in Cape Verd island, where it grows as high as the main mast of a ship. But these trees have been transplanted to Jamaica and Barbados, in both which places they thrive very well. The inhabitants make an oil from the pulp of the fruit, and draw a wine from the body of the trees, which inebriates; and with the rind of these trees they make mats to lie on. Miller.

TO OINT, v. a. [oint, French.] To anoint; to smear with something unctuous.
 They oint their naked limbs with mother'd oil,
 Or from the founts where living sulphurs boil, Dryden.

And death with poison arm'd. Dryden's Æneis.
OINTMENT, n. f. [from oint.] Unguent; unctuous matter to smear any thing.

Life and long health that gracious ointment gave,
 And deadly wounds could heal, and rear again
 The senseless corpse appointed for the grave. Fairy Q.

O'KER, n. f. [See OCHRE.] A colour.
 And Klaus taking for his younglings cark,
 Left greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
 Busy with oker did their shoulders mark. Sidney.

Red oker is one of the most heavy colours; yellow oker is not so, because it is clearer. Dryden's Duffesnoy.

OLD, adj. [eald, Saxon; alts, German.]
 1. Past the middle part of life; not young.
 To old age since you your self aspire,
 Let not old age disgrace my high desire. Sidney.

He woos high and low, rich and poor, young and old. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. Of long continuance; begun long ago.
 When Gardiner was sent over as ambassador into France, with great pomp, he said unto an old acquaintance of his that came to take his leave of him, Now I am in my gloria patri. Yea, said his friend, and I hope, et nunc et semper. Or, replied the bishop, if it please the king my master, fiat erat in principio, a poor scholar of Cambridge again. Camden's Remains.

3. Not new.
 The vine beareth more grapes when it is young; but grapes that make better wine when it is old; for that the juice is better concocted. Bacon's Nat. History.

4. Ancient; not modern.
 The Genoese are cunning, industrious, and inured to hardship; which was likewise the character of the old Ligurians. Addison on Italy.

5. Of any specified duration.
 How old art thou? Not so young, Sir, to love a woman for singing; nor so old to doat on her for any thing. I have years on my back forty-eight. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Plead you to me, fair dame, I know you not.
 In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
 As strange unto your town as to your talk. Shakespeare.

Any man that shall live to see thirty persons descended of his body alive together, and all above three years old, makes this feast, which is done at the cost of the state. Bacon.

6. Subsisting before something else.
 The Latian king, unless he shall submit,
 Own his old promise, and his new prove. Dryd.

He must live in danger of his house falling about his ears, and will find it cheaper to build it again from the ground in a new form; which may not be so convenient as the old. Swift's Proj. for the Advan. of Relig.

7. Long practised.
 Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, will they now commit whoredoms with her? Ezek. xxiii. 43.

8. A word to signify in burlesque language; more than enough.
 Here will be old Utis; it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Here's a knocking indeed; if a man were potter of hell gate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare.

9. Of old; long ago; from ancient times.
 These things they cancel, as having been instituted in regard of occasions peculiar to the times of old, and as being now superfluous. Hooker, b. v. f. 35.

Whether such virtue spent of old now fail'd
 More angels to create. Milt. P. Lost, b. ix.

A land there is, Hesperia nam'd of old,
 The soil is fruitful, and the men are bold;
 Now call'd Italia, from the leader's name. Dryden.

In days of old there liv'd of mighty fame,
 A valiant prince, and Thebes was his name. Dryd.

OLD-FASHIONED, adj. [old and fashion.] Formed according to obsolete custom.

ON. prep. [an, Dutch; an, German.]
1. It is put before the word, which signifies that which is under, that by which any thing is supported, which any thing covers, or where any thing is fixed.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
What news?—
—Richmond is on the seas.—

—There let him sink and be the seas on him. Shakespeare.
Distracted terror knew not what was best;
On what determination to abide. Daniel's Civ. Wars.

How soon hath time, the little thief of youth,
Stol'n on his wing my three and twentieth year,
My halting days fly on with full career. Milton.

As some to witness truth heav'n's call obey,
So some on earth must, to confirm it, stay. Dryden.
They stooping low,

Perch'd on the double tree. Dryden's Æn. vi.
2. It is put before any thing that is the subject of action.
Th' unhappy husband, husband now no more,
Did on his tuneful harp his loss deplore. Dryden.

Mischiefs on mischiefs, greater still and more,
The neighb'ring plain with arms is cover'd o'er. Dryden.

4. Noting a state of progression.
Ho Mæris! whither on thy way so fast?
This leads to town. Dryden.

5. It sometimes notes elevation.
Chufe next a province for thy vineyard's reign,
On hills above, or in the lowly plain. Dryden.

6. Noting approach or invasion.
Their navy ploughs the wat'ry main,
Yet soon expect it on your shores again. Dryden.

On me, on me let all thy fury fall,
Nor err from me, since I deserve it all. Pope.

7. Noting dependance or reliance.
On God's providence and on your bounty, all their present support and future hopes depend. Smallbridge.

8. At, noting place.
On each side her,
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleo.

9. It denotes the motive or occasion of any thing.
The same prevalence of genius, the world cannot pardon your concealing, on the same consideration; because we neither have a living Varus nor a Horace. Dryden.

The joy of a monarch for the news of a victory, must not be exprest like the ecstacy of a harlequin on the receipt of a letter from his mistress. Dryden's Duffney.

The best way to be used by a father on any occasion, to reform any thing he wishes mended in his son. Lacke.

We abstain on such solemn occasions from things lawful, out of indignation that we have often gratified ourselves in things unlawful. Smallbridge's Sermons.

10. It denotes the time at which any thing happens: as, this happened on the first day. On is used, I think, only before day or hour.

11. It is put before the object of some passion.
Compassion on the king commands me stop. Shakespeare.

Could tears recal him into wretched life,
Their sorrow hurts themselves; on him is lost. Dryden.

12. In forms of denunciation it is put before the thing threatened.
Hence on thy life; the captive maid is mine,
Whom not for price or pray'r I will resign. Dryden.

13. Noting imprecation.
Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you;
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakespeare.

14. Noting invocation.
On thee, dear wife, in deserts all alone
He call'd. Dryden's Virg. Georg. iv.

15. Noting the state of any thing.
—The earth shook to see the heav'n's on fire,
And not in fear of your nativity. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

The horses burnt as they stood fast tied in the stables, or by chance breaking loose ran up and down with their tails and mains on a light fire. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

His fancy grows in the progress, and becomes on fire like a chariot wheel by its own rapidity. Pope's Pref. to Iliad.

16. Noting stipulation or condition.
I can be satisfied on more easy terms. Dryden.

17. Noting distinction or opposition.
The Rhodians, on the other side, mindful of their former honour, valiantly repulsed the enemy. Kneller.

18. Before

ONC

18. Before it, by corruption, it stands for of.
This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach on't. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A thriving gamester has but a poor trade on't, who fills his pockets at the price of his reputation. Locke's Educat.
19. Noting the manner of an event.
Note,
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden? Shakesp.
20. On, the same with upon. See UPON.
ON. adv.
1. Forward; in succession.
As he forbore one act, so he might have foreborn another, and after that another, and so on, till he had by degrees weakened, and at length mortified and extinguished the habit itself. South's Sermons.
If the tenant fail the landlord, he must fail his creditor, and he his, and so on. Locke.
These smaller particles are again composed of others much smaller, all which together are equal to all the pores or empty spaces between them; and so on perpetually till you come to solid particles, such as have no pores. Newt.
2. Forward; in progression.
On indeed they went; but oh! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their head-long course.
So saying, on he led his radiant files. Daniel.
Hopping and flying, thus they led him on To the flow lake. Milton.
What kindled in the dark the vital flame,
And ere the heart was form'd, push'd on the red'ning stream.
Dryden.
Go to, I did not mean to chide you;
On with your tale. Blackmore on Creation.
3. In continuance; without ceasing.
Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morrow dawn. Rowe's J. Shore.
Sing on, sing on, for I can ne'er be cloy'd.
You roam about, and never are at rest;
By new desires, that is, new torments still posselt:
As in a feverish dream you still drink on,
And wonder why your thirst is never gone. Dryden.
The peasants defy the sun; they work on in the hottest part of the day without intermission. Locke's Educat.
4. Not off.
5. Upon the body, as part of dress.
A long cloak he had on. Sidney.
Stiff in brocade, and pinch'd in stays,
Her patches, paint, and jewels on;
All day let envy view her face,
And Phyllis is but twenty-one. Prior.
6. It notes resolution to advance.
Since 'tis decreed, and to this period lead
A thousand ways, the noblest path we'll tread;
And bravely on, till they or we, or all,
A common sacrifice to honour fall. Denham.
ON. interj. A word of incitement or encouragement to attack; elliptically for go on.
Therefore on, or snip your sword stark-naked; for meddle you must. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
Cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakesp. R. III.
ONCE. adv. [from one.]
1. One time.
Trees that bear mast, are fruitful but once in two years;
the cause is, the expence of sap. Bacon.
Forthwith from out the ark a raven flies,
And after him the furer messenger,
A dove, sent forth once and again to spy
Green trees or ground. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
You came out like some great monarch, to take a town but once a year, as it were for your diversion, though you had no need to extend your territories. Dryden.
O virgin! daughter of eternal night,
Give me this once thy labour, to sustain
My right, and execute my just disdain. Dryden.
In your tuneful lays,
Once more refund the great Apollo's praise. Pope.
2. A single time.
Who this heir is, he does not once tell us. Locke.
3. The same time.
At once with him they rose:
Their rising all at once was as the sound
Of thunder heard remote. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast.
And on the lips a burning kiss impress'd. Dryden.
Now that the fixed stars, by reason of their immense dif-tance, appear like points, unless so far as their light is diluted by refraction may appear from hence, that when the

ONE

- moon passes over them and eclipses them, their light vanishes, not gradually like that of the planets, but all at once. Newt.
4. At a point of time indivisible.
Night came on, not by degrees prepared,
But all at once; at once the winds arise,
The thunders roll. Dryden's Cimon and Iphig.
5. One time, though no more.
Fulcius, those ill deeds that fully fame,
In blood once tainted, like a current run
From the lewd father to the lewder son. Dryden.
6. At the time immediate.
This hath all its force at once, upon the first impression, and is ever afterwards in a declining state. Attorbury.
7. Formerly; at a former time.
Thereon his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey.
My soul had once some foolish fondness for thee,
But hence 'tis gone. Denham.
8. Once seems to be rather a noun than an adverb, when it has at before it, and when it is joined with an adjective: as, this once, that once.
ONE. adj. [an, one, Saxon; een, Dutch; ein, German; b, Greek.]
1. Less than two; single; denoted by an unite.
The man he knew was one that willingly,
For one good look would hazard all. Daniel.
Pindarus the poet, and one of the wisest, acknowledged also one God the most high, to be the father and creator of all things. Raleigh.
If one must be rejected, one succeed,
Make him my Lord, within whose faithful breast
Is fix'd my image, and who loves me best. Dryden.
Love him by parts in all your num'rous race,
And from those parts form one collected grace;
'Then when you have refin'd to that degree,
Imagine all in one, and think that one is he. Dryden.
2. Indefinitely; any.
We shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days. Shakespeare.
I took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other. Shakespeare's Tempest.
When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and un-derstandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart. Matt. xiii. 19.
If any one prince made a felicity in this life, and left fair fame after death, without the love of his subjects, there were some colour to despise it. Suckling.
3. Different; diverse; opposed to another.
What a precious comfort to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes. Shakespeare.
It is one thing to draw outlines true, the features like, the proportions exact, the colouring tolerable, and another thing to make all these graceful. Dryden.
Suppose the common depth of the sea, taking one place with another, to be about a quarter of a mile. Burnet.
It is one thing to think right, and another thing to know the right way to lay our thoughts before others with advantage and clearness. Locke.
My legs were clost together by so many wrappers one over another, that I looked like an Egyptian mummy. Add.
Two bones rubbed hard against one another, or with a file, produce a fetid smell. Arbutnot on Aliments.
At one time they keep their patients so warm, as almost to stifle them, and all of a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker on Learning.
4. One of two opposed to the other.
Ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this. Deutr. iv. 32.
Both the matter of the stone and marchasite, had been at once fluid bodies, till one of them, probably the marchasite, first growing hard, the other, as being yet of a more yielding consistence, accommodated itself to the harder's figure. Boyle.
There can be no reason why we should prefer any one action to another, but because we have greater hopes of advantage from the one than from the other. Smallbridge.
5. Particularly one.
One day when Phæbe fair,
With all her band was following th' chase,
This nymph quite tir'd with heat of scorching air,
Sat down to rest. Fairy Queen, b. i.
6. Some future.
Heav'n waxeth old, and all the spheres above
Shall one day faint, and their swift motion stay;
And time itself, in time shall cease to move,
But the soul survives and lives for aye. Davies.
ONE. n. f. [There are many uses of the word one, which serve to denominate it a substantive, though some of them may seem rather to make it a pronoun relative, and some may perhaps

ONE

- perhaps be considered as consistent with the nature of an adjective.]
1. A single person.
If one by one you wedded all the world,
She you kill'd would be unparallel'd. Shakespeare.
Although the beauties, riches, honours, sciences, virtues, and perfections of all men were in the present possession of one, yet somewhat beyond and above all this there would still be sought and earnestly thirsted for. Hooker, b. i.
From his lofty steed he flew,
And raising one by one the suppliant crew,
To comfort each. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
When join'd in one, the good, the fair, the great,
Descends to view the mule's humble seat. Granville.
2. A single mass or aggregate.
It is one thing only as a heap is one. Blackmore.
3. The first hour.
Till 'tis one o'clock, our dance of custom
Let us not forget. Shakesp. M. Wives of Wind.
4. The same thing.
I marvel, why I answer'd not again;
But that's all one, omittance is no-quittance. Shakesp.
To be in the understanding, and not to be understood, is all one as to say any thing is, and is not in the understanding. Locke.
5. A person.
A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging human affairs. Watts's Logic.
6. A person by way of eminence.
Ferdinand
My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one,
The wisest prince that there had reign'd. Shakesp.
7. A distinct or particular person.
That man should be the teacher is no part of the matter;
for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No nations are wholly aliens and strangers the one to the other. Bacon's Holy War.
One or other fees a little box which was carried away with her, and so discovers her to her friends. Dryden.
8. Persons united.
As I have made ye one, lords, one remain:
So I grow stronger, you more honour gain. Shakesp.
9. Concord; agreement; one mind.
The king was well instructed how to carry himself between Ferdinand and Philip, resolving to keep themat one within themselves. Bacon's Henry VII.
He is not at one with himself what account to give of it.
Tilletson.
10. [On, l'on, French.] It is used sometimes a general or indefinite nominative for any man, any person. For one the English formerly used men; as, they live obscurely men know not how, or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham. For which it would now be said, one knows not how, one knows not when; or, it is not known how. Any person; any man indefinitely.
It is not so worthy to be brought to heroical effects by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney, b. ii.
One may be little the wiser for reading this dialogue, since it neither sets forth what Erasm is, nor what the cause should be which threatens her with death. Sidney, b. ii.
One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blest with ease, affluence and power; not of one who had been just stripped of all those advantages. Attorbury.
For provoking of urine, one should begin with the gentlest first. Arbutnot on Aliments.
For some time one was not thought to understand Aristotle, unless he had read him with Averroes's comment. Baker.
11. A person of particular character.
Then must you speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well;
Of one not easily jealous; but being wrought
Perplex'd in the extreme. Shakesp. Othello.
With lives and fortunes trusting one Who so discreetly us'd his own. Waller.
Edward I. was one that very well knew how to use a victory, as well as obtain it. Hale.
One who contemned divine and human laws. Dryden.
12. One has sometimes a plural, either when it stands for persons indefinitely; as, the great ones of the world: or when it relates to some thing going before, and is only the representative of the antecedent noun. This relative mode of speech, whether singular or plural, is in my ear not very elegant, yet is used by good authors.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shakesp.
These successes are more glorious which bring benefit to the world, than such ruinous ones as are dyed in human blood.
Glaville's Scip. Pref.
He that will overlook the true reason of a thing which is but one, may easily find many false ones, error being infinite. Tilletson, Sermon. 1.

ONO

- The following plain rules and directions, are not the less useful because they are plain ones. Attorbury.
There are many whose waking thoughts are wholly employed on their sleeping ones. Addison's Spectator.
Arbitrary power tends to make a man a bad sovereign, who might possibly have been a good one, had he been invested with an authority limited by law. Addison's Freeholder.
This evil fortune which attends extraordinary men, hath been imputed to divers causes that need not be set down, when so obvious an one occurs, that when a great genius appears the dunces are all in conspiracy against him. Swift.
ONE'EYED. adj. [one and eye.] Having only one eye.
A sign-post dauber wou'd disdain to paint
The oney'd heroe on his elephant. Dryden.
The mighty family
Of oney'd brothers hasten to the shore. Addison.
ONEIROCRITICAL. adj. [ὄνειρος and κρίσις.] Gr. onirocritique, Fr. it should therefore according to analogy be written onirocriticall and onirocritick. Interpretative of dreams.
If a man has no mind to pass by abruptly from his imagined to his real circumstances, he may employ himself in that new kind of observation which my onirocritical correspondent has directed him to make. Addison's Spectator.
ONEIROCRITICK. n. f. [ὄνειρος and κρίσις, Gr.] An interpreter of dreams.
Having surveyed all ranks and professions, I do not find in any quarter of the town an onirocritick, or an interpreter of dreams. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 505.
ONE'NESS. n. f. [from one.] Unity; the quality of being one.
Our God is one, or rather very oneness and mere unity, having nothing but itself in itself, and not consisting, as all things do besides God, of many things. Hooker.
The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases, is the one eternal indivisible divine nature, and the eternity of the son's generation, and his co-eternity, and his consubstantiality with the father when he came down from Heaven and was incarnate. Hammond.
ONERARY. adj. [onerarius, Lat. onerajse, Fr.] Fitted for carriage or burthens.
TO ONERATE. v. a. [onero, Lat.] To load; to burthen.
ONERATION. n. f. [from onerate.] The act of loading. Dict.
ONEROUS. adj. [onerous, Fr. onerosus, Lat.] Burthenfome; oppressive.
A banished person, that is absent out of necessity, retains all things onerous to himself, as a punishment for his crime. Ayliffe's Parergon.
ONION. n. f. [oignon, French.]
It hath an orbicular, coated, bulbous root; the leaves are hollow or pip; the stalk also hollow and swells out in the middle; the flowers consisting of six leaves are collected into a spherical head; the style of the flower becomes a roundish fruit divided into three cells, containing roundish seeds. Mill.
If the boy have not a woman's gift
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well. Sha. Taming of the Shrew.
I an as, am onion-ey'd. Sha. Ant. and Cleopatra.
This is ev'ry cook's opinion,
No sav'ry dish without an onion:
But lest your kissing should be spoil'd,
Your onions must be thoroughly boil'd. Swift.
ONLY. adj. [from one, onely, or onelike.]
1. Single; one and no more.
Of all whom fortune to my sword did bring,
This only man was worth the conquering. Dryden.
2. This and no other.
The logic now in use has long possessed the chair, as the only art taught in the schools for the direction of the mind in the study of the sciences. Locke.
3. This above all other: as, he is the only man for musick.
ONLY. adv.
1. Simply; singly; merely; barely.
I propose my thoughts only as conjectures. Burnet.
The posterity of the wicked inherit the fruit of their father's vices; and that not only by a just judgment, but from the natural course of things. Tilletson, Sermon. 4.
All who deserve his love, he makes his own;
And to be lov'd himself, needs only to be known. Dryd.
Nor must this contrition be exercised by us, only for grosser evils; but when we live the best. Wake.
2. So and no otherwise.
Every imagination of the thoughts of his heart, was only evil continually. Gen. vi. 5.
3. Singly without more: as, only begotten.
ONOMANCY. n. f. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Divination by a name.
Definitions were superstitiously, by onomancy, deciphered out of names, as though the names and natures of men were suitable, and fatal necessities concurred herein with voluntary motion. Candem.
ONOMANTICAL. adj. [ὄνομα and μαντεία.] Predicting by names.
Theodatus, when curious to know the success of his wars against the Romans, an onomantical or name-wizard Jew, willed

ONY

willed him to shut up a number of swine and give some of them Roman names, others Gothish names with several marks, and there to leave them. Camden.

O'NSET. n. f. [on and set.]

1. Attack; storm; assault; first brunt.

As well the soldier dieth, which standeth still, as he that gives the bravest onset. Sidney, b. ii.

1. All breathless, weary, faint,

Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,

And kindling new his courage, seeming quiet,

Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint

He made him stoop. Sidney, b. ii.

The shout

Of battle now began, and rushing sound

Of onset. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Sometimes it gains a point; and presently it finds itself baffled and beaten off; yet still it renews the onsets, attacks the difficulty afresh; plants this reasoning and that argument, like so many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way into the obstinate enclosed truth. South.

Without men and provisions it is impossible to secure conquests that are made in the first onsets of an invasion. Addison.

Observe

The first impetuous onsets of his grief;

Use every artifice to keep him steadfast. Philips.

2. Something added by way of ornamental appendage. This sense, says Nicholson, is still retained in Northumberland, where onset means a tuft.

I will with deeds requite thy gentleness;

And for an onset, Titus, to advance

Thy name and honourable family,

Lavinia will I make my empress. Shakspeare, Tit. And.

To O'NSET. v. a. [from the noun.] To set upon; to begin. This for a while was hotly onsett and a reasonable price offered, but soon cooled again. Carew.

O'NSLAUGHT. n. f. [on and slay. See SLAUGHTER.] Attack; storm; onset.

They made a halt

To view the ground, and where 't assault,

Then call'd a council, which was best,

By siege or onslaught to invest

The enemy; and 'twas agreed

By storm and onslaught to proceed. Hudibras, p. i.

ONTOLOGIST. n. f. [from ontology.] One who considers the affections of being in general; a metaphysician.

ONTOLOGY. n. f. [ὄντα and λόγος.] The science of the affections of being in general; metaphysics.

The modes, accidents and relations that belong to various beings, are copiously treated of in metaphysics, or more properly ontology. Watts's Logic.

ONWARD. adv. [onþearne, Saxon.]

1. Forward; progressively.

My lord,

When you went onward on this ended action,

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye. Shakspeare.

Satan was now at hand, and from his seat

The monster moving onward came as fast,

With horrid strides. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

Him thro' the spicy forest onward come

Adam discern'd, as in the door he sat

Of his cool bow'r. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Not one looks backward, onward still he goes,

Yet ne'er looks forward farther than his nose. Pope.

2. In a state of advanced progression.

Philoxenus came to see how onward the fruits were of his friends labour. Sidney.

You are already so far onward of your way, that you have forsaken the imitation of ordinary converse. Dryden.

3. Somewhat farther.

A little onward lend thy guiding hand

To these dark steps, a little farther on. Milton.

O'NYCHA. n. f. It is found in two different senses in scripture. — The odoriferous snail or shell, and the stone named onyx. The greatest part of commentators explain it by the onyx or odoriferous shell, like that of the shell-fish called purpura. The onyx is fitted for in watry places of the Indies, where grows the spicanardi, which is the food of this fish and what makes its shell so aromatick. Calvert.

Take sweet spices, onycha, and galbanum. Ex. xxx. 34.

O'NYX. n. f. [ὄνυξ.] The onyx is a semipellucid gem, of which there are several species, but the bluish white kind, with brown and white zones, is the true onyx legitima of the ancients. It is a very elegant and beautiful gem, and the regular arrangement and disposition of its colours make amends for their want of show. Hill's Mat. Med.

Nor are her rare endowments to be fold,

For glittering fand by Ophir shewn,

The blue-eyed saphir, or rich onyx stone. Sandys.

The onyx is an accidental variety of the agat kind: it is of a dark horny colour, in which is a plate of a bluish white, and sometimes of red: when on one or both sides the white, there happens to lie also a plate of a reddish or fresh colour, the jewellers call the stone a fardonyx. Woodward on Lapp.

OÖZE. n. f. [either from œzus, waters, French; or œz, wetness, Saxon.]

1. Soft mud; mire at the bottom of water; slime.

My son I th' œze is bedded. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Some carried up into their grounds the œze or salt water mud, and found good profit thereby. Carew.

Old father Thames rais'd up his rev'rend head,

Deep in his œze he sought his fedy bed,

And thrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.

2. Soft flow; spring. This seems to be the meaning in Prior.

From his first fountain and beginning œze,

Down to the sea each brook and torrent flows. Prior.

3. The liquor of a tanner's vat.

To OÖZE. v. n. [from the noun.] To flow by stealth; to run gently; to drain away.

When the contracted limbs were cramp'd, even then

A wat'ry humour swell'd and ooz'd agen. Dryden.

Where creeping waters œze,

Where marshes flaguate, and where rivers wind,

Cluster the rolling fogs. Thomson, Autumn.

The lilly drinks

The latent rill, scarce oozing thro' the grass. Thomson.

OÖZY. adj. [from œze.] Miry; muddy; slimy.

From his œzy bed,

Old father Thames advanc'd his rev'rend head. Pope.

To OPA'CATE. v. a. [opacē, Lat.] To shade; to cloud; to darken; to obscure.

The same corpuscles upon the unfopping of the glafs, did opacate that part of the air they moved in. Boyle.

OPA'CITY. n. f. [opacitē, Fr. opacitas, Lat.] Cloudiness; want of transparency.

Can any thing escape the perspicacity of those eyes in whose optics there is no opacity? Brown.

Had there not been any night, shadow or opacity, we should never have had any determinate conceit of darkness. Glanville.

How much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit is it to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The least parts of almost all natural bodies, are in some measure transparent; and the opacity of those bodies ariseth from the multitude of reflexions caus'd in their internal parts. Newton, Opt.

OPA'COUS. adj. [opacitē, Latin.] Dark; obscure; not transparent.

When he perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal diffusion through the whole place that it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, and more subtle far than they, and consequently, divisible into lesser atoms; and having lesser pores, gives less scope to our eyes to mis light. Digby.

Upon the firm opacous globe

Of this round world, whose first convex divides

The luminous inferior orbs, inclos'd

From chaos, and th' inroad of darkness old,

Satan alighted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

OPAL. n. f. The opal is a very elegant and a very singular kind of stone, it hardly comes within the rank of the pellucid gems, being much more opaque, and less hard. It is found always in the pebble shape of various sizes, from the head of a pin to the bigness of a walnut. It is naturally bright, smooth and glossy, and shows all its beauty without the help of the lapidary: in colour it much resembles the finest mother of pearl; its basis seeming a bluish or greyish white, but with a property of reflecting all the colours of the rainbow, as turned differently to the light, among which the green and the blue are particularly beautiful, but the fiery red is the finest of all. This stone is found in the East-Indies, in Egypt, Persia and Tartary, and in some parts of Europe, particularly in Bohemia; but the oriental is much the finest. Hill's Mat. Med.

Thy mind is a very opal. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

Th' empyreal heav'n, extended wide

In circuit, undetermin'd square or round;

With opal towers, and battlements adorn'd

Of living saphir. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.

We have this stone from Germany, and is the same with the opal of the ancients. Woodward on Lapp.

OPA'QUE. adj. [opacitē, Lat.]

They

Shot upward still direct, whence no way round

Shadow from body opaque can fall. Milton, Par. Lost.

These disappearing fixt stars were actually extinguish'd and turned into more opaque and gross planet-like bodies. Chyenne's Phil. Prin.

 Carnal desire inflaming,
 Speculative painting, without the assistance of manual operation, can never attain to perfection, but slothfully languishes; for it was not with his tongue that Apelles performed his noble works.
Dryden's Discreet.

In this understanding piece of clock-work, his body as well as other senseless matter has colour, warmth and softness. But these qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else.
Bentley.
 3. [In surgery.] The part of the art of healing which depends on the use of instruments.

4. The motions or employments of an army.
OPERATIVE. adj. [from operare.] Having the power of acting; having forcible agency.

To be over curious in searching how God's all-piercing and operative spirit distinguishing gave form to the matter of the universal, is a search like unto his, who not contented with a known ford, will presume to pass over the greatest rivers in all parts where he is ignorant of their depths.
Ral.
 Many of the nobility endeavoured to make themselves popular, by speaking in parliament against those things which were most grateful to his majesty; and he thought a little discountenance upon those persons would suppress that spirit within themselves, or make the poison of it less operative upon others.
Clarendon.

In actions of religion we should be zealous, active and operative, so far as prudence will permit.
Taylor.
 This circumstance of the promise must give life to all the rest, and make them operative toward the producing of good life.
Decay of Piety.

It holds in all operative principles, especially in morality; in which, not to proceed, is certainly to go backward.
South.
 The will is the conclusion of an operative syllogism.
Norr.

OPERATOR. n. f. [operator, Fr. from operare.] One that performs any act of the hand; one who produces any effect.
 An imaginary operator opening the first with a great deal of nicety, upon a curiosity view appeared like the head of another.
Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 275.

To administer this dose, there cannot be fewer than fifty thousand operators, allowing one operator to every thirty.
Swift.
OPEROUS. adj. [operosus, Latin.] Laborious; full of trouble and tediousness.

Such an explication is purely imaginary, and also very operose, and would affect a great part of the universe; they would be as hard put to it to get rid of this water, when the deluge was to cease, as they were at first to procure it.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Written language, as it is more operous, so it is more digested, and is permanent.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO OPIN. v. n. [opino, Latin.] To think; to judge; to be of opinion.
 Fear is an ague, that forsakes
 And haunts by its those whom it takes;
 And they'll opine they feel the pain
 And blows they felt to-day, again.
Hudibras, p. i.
 In matters of mere speculation, it is not much material to the welfare of government, or of themselves, whether they opine right or wrong, and whether they be philosophers or no.
South's Sermon.

But I, who think more highly of our kind,
Opine, that nature, as in duty bound,
 Deep hid the shining mischief under ground.
Pope.

OPINATIVE. adj. [from opinion.]
 1. Stiff in a preconceived notion.
 2. Imagined; not proved.

It is the more difficult to find out truth, because it is in such inconsiderable proportions scattered in a mass of opinative uncertainties; like the silver in Hiero's crown of gold.
Glauv. Scpf. c. 9.

OPINATOR. n. f. [opinator, French.] One fond of his own notion; inflexible; adherent to his own opinion.
 What will not opinators and self-believing men dispute of and make doubt of?
Raleigh.

Essex left lord Roberts governour; a man of a four and fifty nature, a great opinator, and one who must be overcome before he would believe that he could be so.
Clarendon.

For all his exact point, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition; as it is pity but all such politick opinators should.
South's Sermon.

OPINATRE. adj. [French.] Obstinate; stubborn.
 Instead of an able man, you desire to have him an insignificant wrangler, opinatre in discourse, and priding himself in contradicting others.
Locke.

OPINATRETY. n. f. [opinatreté, French.] Obstinacy; inflexibility; determination of mind; stubbornness.
 This word, though it has been tried in different forms, is not yet received, nor is it wanted.

Left popular opiniatry should arise, we will deliver the chief opinions.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii.

The one sets the thoughts upon wit and false colours, and not upon truth; the other teaches fallacy, wrangling and opiniatry.
Locke's Education.

So much as we ourselves consider and comprehend of truth and reason, so much we possess of real and true knowledge. The floating of other men's opinions in our brains, make us not one jot the more knowing, though they happen to be true: what in them was science, is in us but opiniatry.
Locke.

I can pass by opiniatry and the busy meddling of those who thrust themselves into every thing.
Woodw. Letters.

I was extremely concerned at his opiniatry in leaving me; but he shall not get rid so.
Pope.

OPINION. n. f. [opinion, Fr. opinio, Lat.]
 1. Persuasion of the mind, without proof or certain knowledge.
Opinion is a light, vain, crude and imperfect thing, settled in the imagination, but never arriving at the understanding, there to obtain the sanction of reason.
Ben. Johnson.

Opinion is, when the assent of the understanding is so far gained by evidence of probability, that it rather inclines to one persuasion than to another, yet not altogether without a mixture of uncertainty or doubting.
Hale.

Stiff in opinion, ever in the wrong.
Dryden.

Blest be the princes who have fought
 For pompous names, or wide dominion,
 Since by their error we are taught,
 That happiness is but opinion.
Prior.

2. Sentiments; judgment; notion.
 Can they make it out against the common sense and opinion of all mankind, that there is no such thing as a future state of misery for such as have lived ill here.
South.

Charity itself commands us, where we know no ill, to think well of all; but friendship, that always goes a pitch higher, gives a man a peculiar right and claim to the good opinion of his friend.
South's Sermons.

We may allow this to be his opinion concerning heirs, that where there are divers children the eldest son has the right to be heir.
Locke.

Philosophers are of opinion, that infinite space is possessed by God's infinite omnipotence.
Locke.

OPITULATION. n. f. [opitulatio, Lat.] An aiding; a helping.

OPIMUM. n. f. A juice, partly of the refinous, partly of the gummy kind. It is brought to us in flat cakes or masses; usually of a roundish figure, very heavy and of a dense texture, not perfectly dry: its colour is a dark brownish yellow; its smell is very unpleasant, of a dead faint kind; and its taste very bitter and very acrid.

It is brought from Natolia, from Egypt, and from the East-Indies, where it is produced from the white garden poppy, a plant of which every part is full of a milky juice, and with which the fields of Asia-Minor are in many places sown as ours are with corn. When the heads grow to maturity, but are yet soft, green and full of juice, incisions are made in them, and from every one of these a few drops flow of a milky juice, which soon hardens into a solid consistence. These drops are gathered with great care, and the finest opium proceeds from the first incisions. In the countries where opium is produced, multitude are employed in preparing it with water, honey and spices, and working it up into cakes; but what we generally have is the mere crude juice, or at most worked up with water, or a small quantity of honey sufficient to bring it into form. The ancients were greatly divided about the virtues and use of opium; some calling it a poison, and others the greatest of all medicines. At present it is in high esteem, and externally applied it is emollient, relaxing and discutient, and greatly promotes suppuration. A moderate dose of opium taken internally, is generally under a grain, yet custom will make people bear a dram as a moderate dose; but in that case nature is vitiated. Its first effect is the making the patient cheerful, as if he had drank moderately of wine; it removes melancholy, excites boldness, and dissipates the dread of danger; and for this reason the Turks always take it when they are going to battle in a larger dose than ordinary; it afterward quiets the spirits, eases pain, and disposes to sleep. After the effect of a dose of opium is over, the pain generally returns in a more violent manner; the spirits, which had been elevated by it, become lower than before, and the pulse languid. An immoderate dose of opium brings on a sort of drunkenness, cheerfulness and loud laughter, at first, and, after many terrible symptoms, death itself. Those who have accustomed themselves to an immoderate use of opium, are subject to relaxations and weaknesses of all the parts of the body; they are apt to be faint, idle and thoughtless, and are generally in a stupid and uncomfortable state, except just after they have taken a fresh dose: they lose their appetite, and in fine grow old before their time.
Hill.

Sleep hath forlook and giv'n me o'er
 To death's benumbing opium as my only cure.
Milton.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporific or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities, whereby it is fitted to produce different operations on different parts of our bodies.
Locke.

 Here Charles contrives the ord'ring of his states;
 Here he resolves his neighb'ring princes fates;
 What nation shall have peace, where war be made,
 Determin'd is in this oraculous shade. Walker.
 Though their general acknowledgments of the weakness
 Of human understanding look like cold and sceptical discouragements;
 Yet the particular expressions of their sentiments are
 As oraculous as if they were omniscient. Glanville's Scetf.
 They have something venerable and oracular, in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope. Pref.
 The oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
 Proteus a name tremendous o'er the main. Pope.
ORACULOUSLY. adv. [from oraculous.] In manner of an oracle.
 The testimony of antiquity, and such as pass oraculously amongst us, were not always so exact as to examining the doctrine they delivered. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. i.
 Hence rise the branching beech and vocal oak,
 Where Jove of old oraculously spoke. Dryden.
ORACULOUSNESS. n. f. [from oraculous.] The state of being oracular.
ORASON. n. f. [oraison, Fr. oratio, Lat.] Prayer; verbal supplication; or oral worship: more frequently written orison.
 Stay, let's hear the oraisons he makes. Shakespeare.
 Business might shorten, not disturb her pray'r;
 Heav'n had the best, if not the greater share:
 An active life, long oraisons forbids,
 Yet still the pray'r, for still the pray'r by deeds. Dryden.

ORA

- ORAL. adj.* [oral, Fr. or, orris, Latin.] Delivered by mouth; not written.
Oral discourse, whose transient faults dying with the found that gives them life, and to not subject to a strict review, more easily escapes observation. Locke's Educat.
 St. John was appealed to as the living oracle of the church; and as his oral testimony lasted the first century, many have observed, that by a particular providence several of our Saviour's disciples, and of the early converts, lived to a very great age, that they might personally convey the truth of the gospel to those times which were very remote. Addison.
ORALLY. adv. [from oral.] By mouth; without writing.
Oral tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws of a kingdom, because they are complex, not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages. Hale's Comm. Laws of Eng.
ORANGE. n. f. [orange, Fr. aurantia, Latin.] The leaves have two lobes or appendages at their base like ears, and cut in form of a heart; the fruit is round and depressed, and of a yellow colour when ripe, in which it differs from the citron and lemon. The species are eight. Miller.
 I will discharge it in your straw-colour'd beard, your orange tawny beard.

 In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute! to some great cause address'd, Stood in himself collected; while each part,
 Motion, each act, won audience. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The constant design of both these orators in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.
 I have listened to an orator of this species, without being able to understand one single sentence. Swift.
 Both orators to much renown'd,
 In their own depths of eloquence were drown'd. Dryden.
 2. A petitioner. This sense is used in addresses to chancery.
ORATORY. n. f. [oratoria, ars, Lat.]
 1. Eloquence; rhetorical skill.
 Each pasture stored with sheep feeding with sober security,
 While the pretty lambs with bleating oratory craved the dams comfort. Stidger.
 When a world of men
 Could not prevail with all their oratory,
 Yet hath a woman's kindness over-ru'd. Shakespeare.
 When my oratory grew tow'rd end,
 I bid them that did love their country's good,
 Cry, God save Richard. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
 Sighs now breath'd
 Unutterable, which the spirit of pray'r
 Inspir'd, and wing'd for heav'n with speedier flight
 Than loudest oratory. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
 By this kind of oratory and professing to decline their own inclinations and wishes, purely for peace and unity, they prevailed over those who were still surprised.
 The former who had to deal with a people of much more politeness, learning, and wit, laid the greatest weight of his oratory upon the strength of his arguments. Swift.
 Come

ORB

- Come harmless characters, that no one hit,
 Come Henley's oratory, Osborn's wit. Pope.
 Exercise of eloquence.
 The Romans had seized upon the fleet of the Antiates, among which there were six armed with rostra, with which the consul Menenius adorned the public place of oratory. Arb.
 3. [Oratoire, French.]
Oratory signifies a private place, which is deputed and allotted for prayer alone, and not for the general celebration of divine service. Ayliffe's Paragon.
 They began to erect to themselves oratories not in any sumptuous or stately manner, which neither was possible by reason of the poor estate of the church, and had been perilous in regard of the world's envy towards them. Hooker.
 Do not omit thy prayers for want of a good oratory or place to pray in; nor thy duty for want of temporal encouragements. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
ORB. n. f. [orbe, Fr. orbis, Latin.]
 1. Sphere; orbicular body; circular body.
 A mighty collection of water inclosed in the bowels of the earth, constitutes an huge orb in the interior or central parts; upon the surface of which orb of water the terrestrial strata are expanded. Woodw. Nat. Hist.
 The with a storm of darts to distance drive
 The Trojan chief; who held at bay from far,
 On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.
 2. Mundane sphere; celestial body; light of heaven.
 In the floor of heav'n
 There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
 But in his motion like an angel flings,
 Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakespeare.
 3. Wheel; any rolling body.
 The orbs
 Of his fierce chariot roll'd as with the found
 Of torrent floods. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
 4. Circle; line drawn round.
 5. Circle described by any of the mundane spheres.
 Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs, though no such things were. Bacon.
 With smiling aspect you serenely move,
 In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.
 6. Period; revolution of time.
 Self-begot, self-raised,
 By our own quick'ning pow'r, when fatal course
 Had circled his full orb, the birth mature
 Of this our native heav'n. Milton. Par. Lost, b. v.
 7. Sphere of action.
 Will you again unknit
 This churlish knot of all abhorred war,
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and nat'ral light. Shakespeare.
 8. It is applied by Milton to the eye, as being luminous and spherical.
 A drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
 Or dim suffusion veil'd. Milton.
ORBA'TION. n. f. [orbatus, Lat.] Privation of parents or children.
ORBED. adj. [from orb.]
 1. Round; circular; orbicular.
 All those sayings will I over swear,
 And all those swearings keep as true in soul,
 As doth that orbed continent the fire,
 That severs day from night. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.
 2. Formed into a circle.
 Truth and justice then
 Will down return to men,
 Or b'd in a rainbow, and like glories wearing. Milton.
 3. Rounded.
 A golden axle did the work uphold,
 Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold. Addison.
ORBITAL. adj. [orbitalis, Fr. orbitalis, Lat.]
 1. Spherical.
 He shall monarchy with thee divide
 Of all things, parted by th' empyreal bounds,
 His quadrature from thy orbicular world. Milton.
 2. Circular.
 The form of their bottom is not the same; for whereas before it was of an orbicular make, they now look as if they were pressed.
 By a circle I understand not here a perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth, and which as to sense may seem circular. Newt.
ORBITALLY. adj. [from orbicular.] Spherically; circularly.
ORBITALNESS. n. f. [from orbicular.] The state of being orbicular.
ORBITATED. adj. [orbitalatus, Latin.] Moulded into an orb.
ORBIT. n. f. [orbite, Fr. orbita, Latin.] The line described by the revolution of a planet.
 Suppose more suns in proper orbits roll'd, Dissolv'd the snows and chae'd the polar cold. Blackm.
 Suppose the earth placed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orb it of Mercury; there the whole ocean

ORBITY. n. f. [orbis, Latin.] Loss, or want of parents or children.
ORC. n. f. [orca, Lat. ῥογγα.] A sort of sea-fish. Anf.
 An island salt and bare,
 The haunt of seals and orcs, and sea-maws clang. Milt.
ORCHAL. n. f. A stone from which a blue colour is made. Anf.
ORCHANET. n. f. An herb. Anf.
ORCHARD. n. f. [either hortyard or wortyard, says Skinner; orchard, Saxon. Junius.] A garden of fruit-trees.
 Planting of orchards is very profitable, as well as pleasurable. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 They overcome their riches, not by making Baths, orchards, fish pools. Ben. Johnson.
 Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side,
 To lawless Sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.
ORCHESTRE. n. f. [French. orchestre.] The place where the musicians are set at a publick show.
ORD. n. f. An edge or sharpness; as in ordbehn, ordbright, &c. and in the Islandish tongue, ord signifies a spear or dart. Gib.
Ord, in old English, signified beginning; whence probably the proverbial phrase odds [ords] and ends, for scraps or remnants.
TO ORDAIN. v. a. [ordino, Lat. ordonner, Fr.]
 1. To appoint; to decree.
 Know the cause why musick was ordain'd;
 Was it not to refresh the mind of man
 After his studies, or his usual pain? Shakespeare.
 Jeroboam ordain'd a feast. 1 Kings xii. 32.
 He hath also prepared for him the instruments of death;
 he ordaineth his arrows against the persecutors. Pf. vii. 13.
 As many as were ordained to eternal life, believed. Acts xiii. 48.
 He commanded us to testify that it is he which was ordained of God to be the judge of quick and dead. Acts x. 42.
 The fatal tent,
 The scene of death, and place ordain'd for punishment. Dryden.
 To souls oppress'd and dumb with grief,
 The Gods ordain this kind relief,
 That musick should in sounds convey What dying lovers dare not say. Waller.
 My reason bends to what thy eyes ordain;
 For I was born to love, and thou to reign. Prior.
 2. To establish; to settle; to institute.
 Mulmutius
Ordain'd our laws, whose use the sword of Caesar Hath too much mangled. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.
 I will ordain a place for Israel. 1 Chron. xvii. 9.
 God from Sinai descending, will himself
 In thunder, lightnings, and loud trumpets found,
Ordain them laws. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
 For thee I have ordain'd it, and Have suffer'd, that the glory may be thine
 Of ending this great war; since none but thou Can end it. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vi.
 Some laws ordains, and some attend the choice
 Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.
 3. To set in an office.
 All signified unto you by a man, who is ordained over the affairs, shall be utterly destroyed. Elphinstone, xiii. 6.
 4. To invest with ministerial function, or sacerdotal power.
 Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned. Stillingfleet.
ORDAINER. n. f. [from ordain.] He who ordains.
ORDEAL. n. f. [ordal, Sax. ordalium, low Lat. ordalie, Fr.] A trial by fire or water, by which the person accused appealed to heaven, by walking blindfold over hot bars of iron; or being thrown, I suppose, into the water; whence the vulgar trial of witches.
 Their ordeal laws they used in doubtful cases, when clear proofs wanted. Hakewill on Providence.
 In the time of king John, the purgation per ignem et aquam, or the trial by ordeal continued; but it ended with this king. Hale.
ORDER. n. f. [ordo, Lat. ordre, Fr.]
 1. Method; regular disposition.
 To know the true state of Solomon's house, I will keep this order; I will set forth the end of our foundation, the instruments for our works, the several employments assigned, and the ordinances we observe. Bacon's New Atlantis.
 As St. Paul was full of the doctrine of the gospel; so it lay all clear and in order, open to his view. Locke.
 2. Established process.
 The moderator, when either of the disputants breaks the rules, may interpose to keep them to order. Watts.
 3. Proper state.
 Any of the faculties wanting, or out of order, produce suitable defects in mens understandings. Locke.
 4. Regularity; settled mode.
 This order with her sorrow she accords,
 Which orderless all form of order brake. Daniel.
 5. Mandate;

ORD

5. Mandate; precept; command.
Give order to my servants, that they take
No note of our being absent. Shaksp. Mer. of Ven.
If the lords of the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, presently some nobleman deputed by the tables published a protestation against those orders and proclamations.
Clarendon.
Upon this new fright, an order was made by both houses for disarming all the papists in England; upon which, and the like orders, though seldom any thing was after done, yet it served to keep up the apprehensions in the people, of dangers and designs, and to disincite them from any reverence or affection to the queen. Clarendon.
I have received an order under your hand for a thousand pounds in words at length. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 60.
6. Rule; regulation.
The church hath authority to establish that for an order at one time, which at another time it may abolish, and in both do well. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
7. Regular government.
The night, their number, and the sudden act
Would dash all order, and protect their fact. Daniel.
8. A society of dignified persons distinguished by marks of honour.
Elves,
The several chairs of order look you scour,
With juice of balm and ev'ry precious flow'r. Shaksp.
Princes many times make themselves desires, and set their hearts upon toys; sometimes upon a building; sometimes upon erecting of an order. Bacon.
She left immortal trophies of her fame,
And to the noblest order gave the name. Dryden.
By shining marks, distinguish'd they appear,
And various orders various ensigns bear. Granville.
9. A rank, or class.
The king commanded the high priest and the priests of the second order, to bring forth out of the temple all the vessels. 2 Kings xxiii. 4.
Th' Almighty seeing,
From his transcendent seat the faints among,
To those bright orders utter'd thus his voice. Milton.
10. A religious fraternity.
Find a bare foot brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here visiting the sick. Shaksp. Rom. and Juliet.
11. [In the plural.] Hierarchical state.
If the faults of men in orders are only to be judged among themselves, they are all in some sort parties. Dryden.
Having in his youth made a good progress in learning, that he might dedicate himself more intirely to religion he entered into holy orders, and in a few years became renowned for his sanctity of life. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 164.
12. Means to an end.
Virgins must remember, that the virginity of the body is only excellent in order to the purity of the soul; for in the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
We should behave reverently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly towards men; and in order to the better discharge of these duties, we should govern ourselves in the use of sensual delights, with temperance. Tillotson, Sermon. 6.
The best knowledge is that which is of greatest use in or- der to our eternal happiness. Tillotson, Sermon. 1.
What we see in order only to what we do not see; and both these states must be joined together. Atterbury.
One man pursues power in order to wealth, and another wealth in order to power, which last is the safer way, and generally followed. Swift's Exam. N<sup>o</sup>. 27.
13. Measures; care.
It were meet you should take some order for the soldiers, which are now fit to be discharged and disposed of some way; which may otherwise grow to as great inconvenience as all this that you have put us from. Spenser on Ireland.
Provide me soldiers,
Whilst I take order for mine own affairs. Shaksp.
The money promised unto the king, he took no order for, albeit Sotrasus required it. 2 Mac. iv. 27.
If any of the family be distressed, order is taken for their relief and competent means to live. Bacon.
14. [In architecture.] A system of the several members, ornaments, and proportions of columns and pilasters; or it is a regular arrangement of the projecting parts of a building, especially those of a column; so as to form one beautiful whole: or order is a certain rule for the proportions of columns, and for the figures which some of the parts ought to have, on the account of the proportions that are given them.
There are five orders of columns; three of which are Greek;
viz. the doric, ionic, and corinthian; and two Italian, viz.
the tuscan and composite. The whole is composed of two parts at least, the column and the entablature, and of four

- parts at the most; where there is a pedestal under the column, and one acroter or little pedestal on the top of the entablature. The column has three parts; the base, the shaft, and the capital; which parts are all different in the several orders.
In the tuscan order, any height being given, divide it into ten parts and three quarters, called diameters, by diameters is meant the thickness of the shaft at the bottom, the pedestal having two; the column with base and capital, seven;
and the entablature one and three quarters.
In the doric order, the whole height being given, is divided into twelve diameters or parts, and one third; the pedestal having two and one third, the column eight, and the entablature two.
In the ionic order, the whole height is divided into thirteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having two and two thirds,
the column nine, and the entablature one and four fifths.
In the corinthian order, the whole height is divided into fourteen diameters and a half, the pedestal having three, the column nine and a half, and the entablature two.
In the composite order, the whole height is divided into fifteen diameters and one third; the pedestal having three and one third, the column ten, and the entablature two.
In a colonnade or range of pillars, the intercolumniation or space between columns in the tuscan order, is four diameters.
In the doric order, two and three quarters; in the ionic or- der, two and a quarter; in the corinthian order, two; and in the composite order, one and a half. Builder's Dict.
TO ORDER. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To regulate; to adjust; to manage; to conduct.
To him that ordereth his conversation aright, will I shew the salvation of God. Pf. l. 23.
As the sun when it ariseth in the heaven, so is the beauty of a good wife in the ordering of her house. Eccles. xxvi. 16.
Thou hast ordered all in measure, number, and weight.
Wisd. xi. 20.
Bias being asked how a man should order his life? answered, as if a man should live long, or die quickly. Bacon.
2. To manage; to procure.
The kitchen clerk that hight digestion,
Did order all the eaters in cleanly wife. Fairy Queen.
3. To methodize; to dispose fully.
These were the orderings of them in their service, to come into the house of the Lord. 1 Chron. xxiv. 19.
4. To direct; to command.
5. To ordain to sacerdotal function.
The book requireth due examination, and giveth liberty to object any crime against such as are to be ordered. Whitgift.
ORDERER. n. f. [from order.] One that orders, methodizes, or regulates.
That there should be a great disposer and orderer of all things, a wife rewarder and punisher of good and evil, hath appeared so equitable to men, that they have concluded it necessary. Suckling.
ORDERLESS. adj. [from order.] Disorderly; out of rule.
All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakspere.
ORDERLINESS. n. f. [from orderly.] Regularity; methodicality.
ORDERLY. adj. [from order.] Methodically; according to order; regularly; regular.
The book requireth but orderly reading. Hooker.
2. Not tumultuous; well regulated.
Balfour, by an orderly and well-governed march, passed in the king's quarters without any considerable loss, to a place of safety. Clarendon, b. viii.
3. According with established method.
As for the orders established, with the law of nature, of God and man, do all favour that which is in being, till or- derly judgment of decision be given against it, it is but justice to exact obedience of you. Hooker's Pref.
A clergy reformed from popery in such a manner, as happily to preserve the mean between the two extremes, in doctrine, worship, and government, perfected this reformation by quiet and orderly methods, free from those confusions and tumults that elsewhere attended it. Atterbury.
ORDERLY. adv. [from order.] Methodically; according to order; regularly; according to rule.
All parts of knowledge have been thought by wise men to be then most orderly delivered and proceeded in, when they are drawn to their first original. Hooker, b. i.
Ask him his name, and orderly proceed
To swear him. Shaksp. Rich. III.
2. Make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion of the time. Shakspere.
It is walled with brick and stone, intermixed orderly. Sandys.
How should those active particles, ever and anon justified by the occasion of other bodies, whereof there is an infinite store, so orderly keep their cells without any alteration of site. Granville.
In the body, when the principal parts, the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferior smaller vessels act orderly

ORDINABLE. adj. [ordinis, Lat.] Such as may be appointed.
All the ways of economy God hath used toward a rational creature, to reduce mankind to that course of living which is most perfectly agreeable to our nature, and by the mercy of God ordinable to eternal bliss. Hamm.
ORDINAL. adj. [ordinalis, Fr. ordinalis, Lat.] Noting order:
as, second, third.
The moon's age is thus found, add to the exact the day of the month and the ordinal number of that month from March inclusive, because the exact begins at March, and the sum of those, casting away thirty or twenty-nine, as often as it ariseth, is the age of the moon. Hollar.
ORDINAL. n. f. [ordinal, Fr. ordinale, Latin.] A ritual; a book containing orders. Ains.
ORDINANCE. n. f. [ordinance, French.]
1. Law; rule; precept.
It seemeth hard to plant any found ordinance, or reduce them to a civil government; since all their ill customs are permitted unto them. Spenser on Ireland.
Let Richard and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together! Shaksp.
2. Observance commanded.
One ordinance ought not to exclude the other, much less to disparage the other, and least of all to undervalue that which is the most eminent. Taylor.
3. Appointment.
Things created to shew bare heads,
When one but of my ordinance stood up,
To speak of peace or war. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
4. A cannon. It is now generally written for distinction or-

Caves and wombly vaultages of France,
Shall chide your trespass and return your mock,
In second accent to his ordinance. Shaksp. Hen. V.
ORDINARILY. adv. [from ordinary.]
1. According to established rules; according to settled method.
We are not to look that the church should change her public laws and ordinances, made according to that which is judged ordinarily, and commonly fittest for the whole, although it chance that for some particular men the same be found inconvenient. Hooker, b. iv. f. 12.
Spirits and rivers do not derive the water which they or- dinarily refund, from rain. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. Commonly; usually.
The instances of human ignorance were not only clear ones, but such as are not to ordinarily suspected.
Prayer ought to be more than ordinarily fervent and vigorous before the sacrament. South's Sermons.
ORDINARY. adj. [ordinarius, Latin.]
1. Established; methodical; regular.
Though in arbitrary governments there may be a body of laws observed in the ordinary forms of justice, they are not sufficient to secure any rights to the people; because they may be dispensed with. Addison's Freeholder.
The standing ordinary means of conviction failing to influence them, it is not to be expected that any extraordinary means should be able to do it. Atterbury.
2. Common; usual.
Yet did she only utter her doubt to her daughters, thinking, since the worst was past, she would attend a further occasion, least over much haste might seem to proceed of the ordinary mistake between sisters in law. Sidney.
It is sufficient that Moles have the ordinary credit of an historian given him. Tillotson, Sermon. 1.
This designation of the person our author is more than ordinary obliged to take care of, because he hath made the conveyance, as well as the power itself, sacred. Lodge.
There is nothing more ordinary than children's receiving into their minds propositions from their parents; which being fastened by degrees, are at last, whether true or false, riveted there. Lodge.
Method is not less requisite in ordinary conversation, than in writing. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 476.
3. Mean; of low rank.
These are the paths wherein ye have walked, that are of the ordinary sort of men; these are the very steps ye have trodden, and the manifest degrees whereby ye are of your guides and directors trained up in that school. Hooker.
Men of common capacity, and but ordinary judgment, are not able to discern what things are fittest for each kind and state of regiment. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
Every ordinary reader, upon the publishing of a new poem, has will and ill-nature enough to turn several passages of it into ridicule, and very often in the right place. Addison.
My speculations, when told single, are delights for the rich and wealthy; after some time they come to the market in great quantities, and are every ordinary man's money.

inary of the place. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.
2. Settled establishment.
Spain had no other wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Valtoline and Palatinate. Bacon.
3. Actual and constant office.
Villiers had an intimation of the king's pleasure to be his cup-bearer at large; and the summer following he was admitted in ordinary. Watts.
4. Regular price of a meal.
Our courteous Antony,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast;
And for his ordinary pays his heart
For what his eyes eat only. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
5. A place of eating established at a certain price.
They reckon all their errors for accomplishments; and all the odd words they have picked up in a coffee-house, or a gaming ordinary, are produced as flowers of style. Swift.
TO ORDINATE. v. a. [ordinatus, Latin.]
1. To appoint.
Finding how the certain right did stand,
With full consent this man did ordinate.
The heir apparent to the crown and land. Daniel.
ORDINATE. adj. [ordinatus, Lat.] Regular; methodical.
Ordinate figures are such as have all their sides, and all their angles equal. Ray on the Creation.
ORDINATION. n. f. [ordinatio, Lat. from ordinate.]
1. Established order or tendency.
Virtue and vice have a natural ordination to the happiness and misery of life respectively. Norris.
2. The act of investing any man with sacerdotal power.
Though ordained by Arian bishops, his ordination was never questioned.
St. Paul looks upon Titus as advanced to the dignity of a prime ruler of the church, and entrusted with a large diocese under the immediate government of their respective elders;
and those deriving authority from his ordination. South.
ORDNANCE. n. f. [This was anciently written more frequently ordnance; but ordnance is used for distinction.] Cannon; great guns.
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?
And heav'n's artillery thunder in the skies? Shaksp.
When a ship feels or rolls in foul weather, the breaking loose of ordnance is a thing very dangerous. Raleigh.
There are examples now of wounded persons that have roared for anguish and torment at the discharge of ordnance, though at a very great distance. Bentley's Serm.
ORDONNANCE. n. f. [French.] Disposition of figures in a picture.
ORDURE. n. f. [ordure, French; from ordus, Lat. Skinner.]
Dung; filth.
Gard'ners with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring and be most delicate. Shaksp.
Working upon human ordure, and by long preparation rendering it odorous, he terms it zibetta occidentalis. Brown.
We added fat pollutions of our own,
T' encrease the steaming ordures of the stage. Dryden.
Renew'd by ordure's sympathetick force,
As oil'd with magic juices for the course, Pope.
Vig'rous he rises.
ORE. n. f. [ore, or on; Saxon; or, Dutch, a mine.]
1. Metal unrefined; metal yet in its mineral state.
Round about him lay on every side,
Great heaps of gold that never would be spent;
Of which some were rude ore not purify'd
Of Mulciber's devouring element. Fairy Queen.
They would have brought them the gold ore aboard their ships. Raleigh's Apology.
A hill not far,
Shone with a glossy scurf, undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Who have labour'd more
To search the treasures of the Roman stores,
Or dig in Grecian mines for purer ore? Rowe's Comm.
We walk in dreams on fairy land,
Where golden ore lies mixt with common find. Dryden.
Those who unripe veins in mines explore,
On the rich bed again the warm turf lay,
'Till time digests the yet imperfect ore,
And know it will be gold another day. Dryden.
Those

- Those profounder regions they explore,
Where metals ripen in vast cakes of ore.
Garth.
2. Metal.
The liquid ore he drain'd
First his own tools; then what might else be wrought,
Fusile, or grav'n in metal.
Milt. Par. Lof. b. xi.
- OREWEED. n. f. A weed either growing upon the rocks under high water mark, or broken from the bottom of the sea by rough weather, and cast upon the next by the wind and flood.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- ORGAL. n. f. Lees of wine.
Ainsl.
- ORGAN. n. f. [organe, Fr. ὄργανον.] The organ of speech, the lungs of respiration.
When he shall hear the died upon his words,
The ever lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
Than when the liv'd indeed.
Shakespeare.
- For a mean and organ, by which this operative virtue might be continued, God appointed the light to be united,
and gave it also motion and heat.
Raleigh.
- The aptness of birds is not so much in the conformity of the organs of speech, as in their attention.
Bacon.
- Can judge and chuse, without the body's aid;
Tho' on such objects they are working still,
As thro' the body's organs are convey'd.
Davies.
2. An instrument of musick consisting of pipes filled with wind and of stops, touched by the hand. [Orgue, Fr.]
A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes in the world, and making every one found a particular note.
Keil.
- While in more lengthen'd notes and flow,
The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow.
Pope.
- ORGANICAL. adj. [organique, Fr. organicus, Lat.]
ORGANICK. adj. [organique, Fr. organicus, Lat.]
1. Consisting of various parts co-operating with each other.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.
Donne.
- He with serpent tongue
Organick, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began:
Milt. P. Lof.
- The organical structure of human bodies, whereby they live and move and are vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise, powerful, and beneficent being.
Bentley's Sermons.
2. Instrumental; acting as instruments of nature or art, to a certain end.
Read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly.
Milton.
3. Respecting organs.
She could not produce a monster of any thing that hath more vital and organical parts than a rock of marble.
Ray.
- They who want the sense of discipline, or hearing, are also by consequence deprived of speech, not by any immediate, organical indisposition, but for want of discipline.
Holder's Elements of Speech.
- ORGANICALLY. adv. [from organical.] By means of organs or instruments; by organical disposition of parts.
All stones, metals, and minerals, are real vegetables; that is, grow organically from proper seeds, as well as plants.
Locke on Nat. Philosophy.
- ORGANICALNESS. n. f. [from organical.] State of being or-ganical.
- ORGANISM. n. f. [from organ.] Organical structure.
How admirable is the natural structure or organism of bodies.
Grew's Cosmol. b. i. c. 4.
- ORGANIST. n. f. [organiste, Fr. from organ.] One who plays on the organ.
He is an organist, and serves that office in a public choir.
Boyle on Colours.
- ORGANIZATION. n. f. [from organize.] Construction in which the parts are so disposed as to be subservient to each other.
Every man's senses differ as much from others in their figure, colour, site, and infinite other peculiarities in the organization, as any one man's can from itself, through divers accidental variations.
Glanv. Scep. c. xxvi.
- That being then one plant, which has such an organization of parts in one coherent body, partaking of one common life, it continues to be the same plant, though that life be communicated to new particles of matter, in a like continued organization.
Locke.
- TO ORGANIZE. v. a. [organiser, Fr. from organ.] To construct so as that one part co-operates with another; to form organically.
As the soul doth organize the body, and give unto every member thereof that substance, quantity, and shape, which

- nature seem most expedient, so the inward grace of sacraments may teach what ferveth best for their outward form.
Hooker, b. v. f. 58.
- A genial and cherishing heat so acts upon the fit and obsequious matter, wherein it was harboured, as to organize and fashion that disposed matter according to the exigencies of its own nature.
Bosle.
- Those nobler faculties in the mind, matter organized could never produce.
Roy on the Creation.
- The identity of the same man consists in a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles in succession vitally united to the same organized body.
Locke.
- ORGANLOFT. n. f. [organ and loft.] The loft where the organs stand.
Five young ladies of no small fame for their great severity of manners, would go no where with their lovers but to an organloft in a church, where they had a cold treat and some few opera songs.
Tatler, No. 61.
- ORGANPIPE. n. f. [organ and pipe.] The pipe of a musical organ.
The thunder,
That deep and dreadful organpipe pronounc'd
The name of Prosper.
Shakespeare's Tempest.
- ORGANY. n. f. [organum, Lat.] An herb.
Ainsl.
- ORGASM. n. f. [orgasme, Fr. ὄργασμος.] Sudden vehemence.
By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed, and perturbations of the mind quieted.
Derham's Physico-Theol.
- ORGELS. n. f. A sea-fish, called likewise organling. Both seem a corruption of the orkenyling, as being taken on the Or-keny coast.
Ainsl.
- ORGILLOUS. adj. [orgueilleux, French.] Proud; haughty.
The princes orgillous, their high blood chafed,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships.
Shakespeare.
- ORGIES. n. f. [orgies, Fr. orgia, Lat.] Mad rites of Bacchus; frantic revels.
These are nights
Solemn to the shining rites,
Of the fairy prince and knights,
While the moon their orgies lights.
Ben. Johnson.
- She feign'd nocturnal orgies; left my bed,
And, mix'd with Trojan dames, the dances led.
Dryd.
- ORICALCH. n. f. [orichalcum, Lat.] Brals.
Not Bilbo steel, nor brals from Corinth fet,
Nor costly orichalc from strange Phœnice,
But such as could both Phœbus' arrows ward,
And th' hailing darts of heav'n beating hard.
Spenser.
- O'RIENT. adj. [orientis, Latin.]
1. Rising as the sun.
Moon that now meet'st the orient sun, now fly't
With the fixed stars.
Milton's Par. Lof. b. v.
- When fair morn orient in heav'n appear'd.
Milton.
2. Eastern; oriental.
3. Bright; shining; glittering; gaudy; sparkling.
The liquid drops of tears that you have shed,
Shall come again transform'd to orient pearl;
Advantaging their loan with interest,
Ofentimes double gain of happiness.
Shakespeare.
- There do breed yearly an innumerable company of gnats, whose property is to fly unto the eye of the lion, as being a bright and orient thing.
Abbot on the World.
- We have spoken of the cause of orient colours in birds;
which is by the fineness of the frainer.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Morning light
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white.
Milton.
- In thick shelter of black shades imbrow'd,
He offers to each weary traveller
His orient liquor in a crystal glass,
To quench the drouth of Phœbus.
Milton.
- The chiefs about their necks the fcutcheons wore,
With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er.
Dryden.
- O'RIENT. n. f. [orient, Fr.] The east; the part where the sun first appears.
- O'RIENTAL. adj. [oriental, French.] Eastern; placed in the east; proceeding from the east.
Your ships went as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to Pequin upon the oriental seas, as far as to the borders of the east Tartary.
Bacon's New Atlantis.
- Some ascribing hereto the generation of gold, conceive the bodies of this situation to receive some appropriate influence from the sun's ascendent, and oriental radiations.
Bacon's Vulgar Err. b. vi.
- O'RIENTAL. n. f. An inhabitant of the eastern parts of the world.
They have been of that great use to following ages, as to be imitated by the Arabians and other orientals.
Grew.
- O'RIENTALISM. n. f. [from oriental.] An idiom of the eastern languages; an eastern mode of speech.

O'RIENTALITY.

ORI

- O'RIENTALITY. n. f. [from oriental.] State of being oriental.
His revolution being regular, it hath no power nor efficacy peculiar from its orientality, but equally disperseth his beams.
Bacon's V. Err. b. vi.
- O'RIFFICE. n. f. [orifice, Fr. orificium, Lat.] Any opening or perforation.
The prince of Orange, in his first hurt by the Spanish boy, could find no means to stanch the blood, but was fain to have the orifice of the wound stopped by men's thumbs, succeeding one another for the space of two days.
Bacon.
- Their mouths
With hideous orifice gap'd on us wide,
Portending hollow truce.
Milton's Par. Lof. b. vi.
- Ætna was bored through the top with a monstrous orifice.
Addison's Guardian, No. 103.
- Blood-letting, Hippocrates faith, should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice by stabbing or perforation.
Arbuthnot on Cohn.
- O'RIFLAMB. n. f. [probably a corruption of auriflamme, Lat. or flamme d'or, Fr. in like manner as oripment is corrupted.]
A golden standard.
Ainsl.
- O'RIGAN. n. f. [origanum, Fr. origanum, Lat.] Wild marjorum.
I saw her in her proper hue,
Bathing herself in organ and thyme.
Fairly Queen.
- O'RIGIN. n. f. [origine, Fr. origo, Lat.]
1. Beginning; first existence.
The sacred historian only treats of the origins of terrestrial animals.
Bentley's Sermons.
2. Fountain; source; that which gives beginning or existence.
Nature which contains its origin,
Cannot be border'd certain in itself.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
- If any station upon earth be honourable, theirs was; and their posterity therefore have no reason to blush at the memory of such an original.
Atterbury.
- Original of beings! pow'r divine!
Since that I live and that I think, is thine.
Prior.
- These great orbs,
Primitive founts, and origins of light.
Prior.
3. First copy; archetype; that from which any thing is transcribed or translated. In this sense origin is not used.
Compare this translation with the original, and the three first stanzas are rendered almost word for word, and not only with the same elegance, but with the same turn of expression.
Addison's Spectator, No. 229.
- External material things, as the objects of sensation; and the operations of our minds within, as the objects of reflection; are the only originals from whence all our ideas take their beginnings.
Locke.
4. Derivation; descent.
They, like the seed from which they sprung, accurst
Against the gods immortal hatred nurs'd;
An impious, arrogant, and cruel brood,
Expressing their original from blood.
Dryden.
- O'RIGINAL. adj. [original, Fr. originalis, Latin.] Primitive; pristine; first.
The original question was, whether God by this law hath forbidden the giving any worship to himself by an image?
Stillingsfleet on Idolatry.
- Had Adam obeyed God, his original perfection, the knowledge and ability God at first gave him, would still have continued.
Wake's Prep. for Death.
- You fill, fair mother, in your offspring trace
The flock of beauty destin'd for the race;
Kind nature, forming them the pattern took,
From heav'n's first work, and Eve's original look.
Prior.
- O'RIGINALLY. adv. [from original.]
1. Primarily; with regard to the first cause.
A very great difference between a king that holdeth his crown by a willing act of estates, and one that holdeth it originally by the law of nature and descent of blood.
Bacon.
- A present blessing upon our fests, is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity.
Smalbridge's Sermons.
2. At first.
The metallic and mineral matter, found in the perpendicular intervals of the strata, was originally, and at the time of the deluge, lodged in the bodies of those strata.
Woodw.
3. As the first author.
For what originally others write,
May be so well disguis'd and so improv'd,
That with some justice it may pass for yours.
Rofcomm.
- O'RIGINALNESS. n. f. [from original.] The quality or state of being original.
- O'RIGINARIE. adj. [originarie, Fr. from origin.]
1. Productive; causing existence.
The production of animals in the ordinary way, requires a certain degree of warmth, which proceeds from the sun's influence.
Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
2. Primitive; that which was the first state.
Remember I am built of clay, and must Resolve to my originary dust.
Sandy's Par. on Job.

ORP

- To O'RIGINATE. v. a. [from origin.] To bring into existence.
- O'RIGINATION. n. f. [originatio, Lat. from originate.] The act of bringing into existence; first production.
The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination ex-cogitated by the heathen, were particular.
Hale.
- This cruxa is propagated by animal parents, to wit, butterflies, after the common origination of all caterpillars.
Ray.
- Descartes first introduced the fancy of making a world, and deducing the origination of the universe from mechanical principles.
Keil.
- O'RISSONS. n. f. [oraison, French: this word is variously accented; Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables; Milton and Crashaw on the first, others on the second.] A prayer; a supplication.
Nymph, in thy orisons
Be all thy sins remember'd.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Alas! your too much love and care of me,
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.
Shakespeare.
- He went into St. Paul's church, where he had orisons and Te Deum sung.
Bacon's Henry VII.
- My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early larks shrill orisons, to be An anthem at the day's nativity.
Crashaw.
- His daily orisons attract our ears.
Sands on Job.
- Lowly they bow'd, adoring, and began Their orisons, each morning duly paid.
Milton.
- So went he on with his orisons,
Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones.
Cotton.
- Here at dead of night
The hermit oft, mid his orisons, hears Aghast the voice of time departing tow'rs.
Dyer.
- O'RILOP. n. f. [overloop, Dutch.] The middle deck.
Skimm.
- A small ship of the king's called the Penfie, was assailed by the Lyon, a principal ship of Scotland; wherein the Penfie so applied her shot, that the Lyon's orelop was broken, her sails and tackling torn; and lastly, she was boarded and taken.
Hoyward.
- O'ORNAMENT. n. f. [ornamentum, Lat. ornament, Fr.]
1. Embellishment; decoration.
So may the outward shows be least themselves;
The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
Shakespeare.
- The Tufcan chief, to me has sent Their crown, and every regal ornament.
Dryden.
- No circumstances of life can place a man so far below the notice of the world, but that his virtues or vices will render him, in some degree, an ornament or disgrace to his profession.
Rogers, Serm. 9.
2. Honour; that which confers dignity.
The persons of different qualities in both sexes, are indeed allowed their different ornaments; but these are by no means costly, being rather designed as marks of distinction than to make a figure.
Addison on Italy.
- ORNAMENTAL. adj. [from ornament.] Serving to decoration;
giving embellishment.
Some think it most ornamental to wear their bracelets on their wrists, others about their ancles.
Brown.
- If the kind be capable of more perfection, though rather in the ornamental parts of it, than the essential, what rules of morality or respect have I broken, in naming the defects that they may hereafter be amended?
Dryden.
- Even the Heathens have esteem'd this variety not only ornamental to the earth, but a proof of the wisdom of the creator.
Woodw. Nat. Hist.
- If no advancement of knowledge can be had from universities, the time there spent is lost; every ornamental part of education is better taught elsewhere.
Swift on Religion.
- ORNAMENTALLY. adv. [from ornamental.] In such a manner as may confer embellishment.
- ORNAMENTED. adj. [from ornament.] Embellished; bedecked.
- O'RNATE. adj. [ornatus, Lat.] Bedecked; decorated; fine.
What thing of sea or land,
Female of sex it seems,
That so bedeck'd, ornate and gay,
Comes this way sailing.
Milton's Agonistes.
- O'RNATENESS. n. f. [from ornate.] Finery; state of being embellished.
- ORNA'TURE. n. f. [ornatus, Lat.] Decoration.
Ainsl.
- ORNI'SCOPIST. n. f. [ὄρνις and σκοπεῖν.] One who examines the flight of birds in order to foretel futurity.
- ORNI'THOLOGY. n. f. [ὄρνις and λόγος.] A discourse on birds.
- O'RPAN. n. f. [ὄρφανός, or orphanus, Fr.] A child who has lost father or mother, or both.
Poor orphan in the wide world scattered,
As budding branch rent from the native tree,
And thrown forth until it be withered:
Such is the state of man.
Fairly Queen, b. ii.
- Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
18 S

To

To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wrongs,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath? Shakefp.
Sad widows, by thee rifled, weep in vain,
And ruin'd orphans of thy rapes complain. Sandys.
The sea with spoils his angry bullets strow,
Widows and orphans making as they go. Waller.
Pity, with a parent's mind,
This helpless orphan whom thou leav'st behind. Dryden.
ORPHAN. adj. [orphelin, Fr.] Bereft of parents.
This king left orphan both of father and mother, found his estate, when he came to age, so disjointed even in the noblest and strongest limbs of government; that the name of a king was grown odious. Sidney, b. ii.
ORPHANAGE. n. f. [orphelinage, Fr. from orphan.] State ORPHANISM. n. f. of an orphan.
ORPIMENT. n. f. [auripigmentum, Lat. orpiment, orpin, Fr.]
True and genuine orpiment is a foliaceous fossil, sometimes found in masses of two or three inches diameter, and one inch in thickness; but it is oftener met with in smaller con-geries of flakes from an eighth of an inch to a third in diameter, lodged in zarnich. See ZARNICH. It is of a fine and pure texture, remarkably heavy, and its colour is a bright and beautiful yellow, like that of gold. It is not hard but very tough, easily bending without breaking; some have declared orpiment to be only mulcovy talk, stained by accident. But talk is always claffick, but orpiment not so; talk also remains unaltered in the strongest fire, whereas orpiment melts readily, and as readily burns away. Orpiment has been supposed to contain gold, and is found in mines of gold, silver, and copper, and sometimes in the strata of marl.
It is frequent in the East-Indies and the Turkish dominions, the finest coming from Smyrna. We have it also in Germany and Saxony. The ancients were well acquainted with this drug, which they called arsenicon; and though they were utterly unacquainted with the poisonous substance called arsenick, yet orpiment has been by some very unjustly deemed a poison; but it appears to be an innocent medicine which the ancients prescribed internally. The painters are very fond of it as a gold colour. Hill's Mat. Med.
For the golden colour, it may be made by some small mixture of orpiment, such as they use to brats in the yellow alchymy; it will easily recover that which the iron loseth. Bacon.
ORPHANOTROPHY. n. f. [ὀρφανότης and τροφή.] An hospital for orphans.
ORPINE. n. f. [orpin, Fr.] Liverer or rose root, anacanthiferos, Telephum, or Rhodia radix. A plant. It hath a rose shaped flower, consisting of several leaves placed orbicularly; out of whose many-leaved empalement rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a three-cornered fruit, consisting of one cell, which is filled with roundish seeds: the leaves are placed alternately on the branches. It is a low plant, whose branches trail on the ground; the leaves are small and roundish, of a glaucous colour, and of a pretty thick confidence. The flowers are small, and of a whitish green colour. Miller.
Cool violets and orpine growing still,
Em bathed balm and cheerful galingale. Spenser.
ORRERY. n. f. An instrument which by many complicated movements represents the revolutions of the heavenly bodies.
It was first made by Mr. Rowley, a mathematician born at Litchfield, and so named from his patron the earl of Orrery:
by one or other of this family almost every art has been encouraged or improved.
ORRIS. n. f. [orris, Latin.] A plant and flower.
It hath no leaves to the flower, but consists of many stamina arising from a five-leaved empalement. The pointal becomes the seed, which is flat and orbicular, and inclosed in the empalement, which becomes a foliaceous capsule, in which are included two sorts of seeds. Miller.
The nature of the orris root is almost singular; for roots that are in any degree sweet, it is but the same sweetness with the wood or leaf; but the orris is not sweet in the leaf;
neither is the flower any thing so sweet as the root. Bacon.
ORRIS. n. f. fold Fr.] A sort of gold or silver lace.
ORTS. n. f. seldom with a singular. [This word is derived by Skinner from ort, German, the fourth part of any thing;
by Mr. Lye more reasonably from orda, Irish, a fragment.
In Anglo-Saxon, ord signifies the beginning; whence in some provinces odds and ends; for ords and ends signify remnants, scattered pieces, refuse; from ord thus used probably came ort.] Refuse; things left or thrown away.
He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth;
A barren-spirited fellow, one that feeds
On abject orts and imitations. Shakefp. Jul. Cas.
The fractions of her faith, orts of her love,
The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes. Shakefp.
Much good do't you then;
Brave pluff and velvet men,
Can feed on orts and safe in your stage-cloths;
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The flagers, and the stage-wrights too. Ben. Johnson.

OSC

ORTHODOX. adj. [ὀρθός and δοξα; orthodox, Fr.] Sound in opinion and doctrine; not heretical.
Be you persuaded and settled in the true protestant religion professed by the church of England; which is as sound and orthodox in the doctrine thereof, as any Christian church in the world. Bacon.
Eternal bliss is not immediately superfructed on the most orthodox beliefs; but as our Saviour saith, if ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them; the doing must be first superfructed on the knowing or believing, before any happiness can be built on it. Hanmond.
ORTHODOXY. adv. [from orthodox.] With soundness of opinion.
The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is so soundly and so orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to the honour of our religion. Bacon.
ORTHODOXY. n. f. [ὀρθόδοξία; orthodoxie, Fr. from orthodox.]
Soundness in opinion and doctrine.
I do not attempt explaining the mysteries of the christian religion, since Providence intended there should be mysteries, it cannot be agreeable to piety, orthodoxy, or good sense, to go about it. Swift.
ORTHODROMICKS. n. f. [from ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος.] The art of sailing in the ark of some great circle, which is the shortest or straightest distance between any two points on the surface of the globe. Harris.
ORTHODROMY. n. f. [ὀρθόδρομος and δρόμος; orthodromie, Fr.]
Sailing in a straight course.
ORTHOGON. n. f. [ὀρθός and γωνία.] A rectangled figure.
The square will make you ready for all manner of compartments; your cylinder for vaulted turrets and round buildings; your orthogon and pyramid, for sharp steeples. Peach.
ORTHOGONAL. adj. [orthogonalis, Fr. from orthogon.] Rectangular.
ORTHOGRAPHER. n. f. [ὀρθόγραφος and γραφία.] One who spells according to the rules of grammar.
He was wont to speak plain, like an honest man and a soldier; and now he is turn'd orthographer, his words are just so many strange dishes. Shakefp.
ORTHOGRAPHICAL. n. f. [from orthography.]
1. Rightly spelled.
2. Relating to the spelling.
I received from him the following letter, which, after having rectified some little orthographical mistakes, I shall make a present of to the public. Addison's Spectator.
3. Delineated according to the elevation, not the ground-plot.
In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation and the just dimensions of each face, and of what belongs to it. Mortimer's Huft.
ORTHOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from orthographical.]
1. According to the rules of spelling.
2. According to the elevation.
ORTHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ὀρθός and γραφία; orthographie, Fr.]
1. The part of grammar which teaches how words should be spelled.
This would render languages much more easy to be learned, as to reading and pronouncing, and especially as to the writing them, which now as they stand we find to be troublesome, and it is no small part of grammar which treats of orthography and right pronunciation. Holder.
2. The art or practice of spelling.
In London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs;
all which reduced to writing, would entirely confound ortho- graphy. Swift.
3. The elevation of a building delineated.
You have the orthography or upright of this ground-plot, and the explanation thereof with a scale of feet and inches.
Moxon's Mech. Exr.
ORTHOPNOEA. n. f. [ὀρθόπνοια; orthopnoie, Fr.] A disorder of the lungs, in which respiration can be performed only in an upright posture.
His disease was an asthma oft turning to an orthopnoea; the cause a translocation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumption.
ORTIVE. adj. [ortive, Fr. ortivus, Lat.] Relating to the rising of any planet or star.
ORTOLAN. n. f. [French.] A small bird accounted very delicious.
Nor ortolans nor godwits. Cowley.
ORVAL. n. f. [orvale, Fr. orvale, Lat.] The herb clary. Di.
ORVETAN. n. f. [orvietano, Italian; so called from a moun-tebank at Orvieto in Italy.] An antidote or counter poison;
a medicinal composition or eluctuary, good against poison.
Bailly.
OSCEHOCELL. n. f. [ὀσχεον and κύτταρον.] A kind of hernia when the intestines break into the scrotum. Di.
OSCILLATION. n. f. [oscillatio, Latin.] The act of moving backward and forward like a pendulum.
OSCILLATORY. adj. [oscillatus, Lat.] Moving backwards and forwards like a pendulum. The

The actions upon the solids are stimulating or increasing their vibrations, or oscillatory motions. Arbutnot.
OSCITANCY. n. f. [oscitantia, Lat.]
1. The act of yawning.
2. Unusual sleepiness; carelessness.
If persons of so circumspect a piety, have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wreckless oscitancy?
Government of the Tongue.
It might proceed from the oscitancy of transcribers, who,
to dispatch their work the sooner, used to write all numbers in cyphers. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 470.
OSCITANT. adj. [oscitans, Latin.]
1. Yawning; unusually sleepy.
2. Sleepy; sluggish.
Our oscitant lazy piety gave vacancy for them, and they will now lend none back again for more active duty. Deacy of Piety.
OSCITATION. n. f. [oscitatio, Lat.] The act of yawning.
I shall defer considering this subject till I come to my treatise of oscitation, laughter, and ridicule. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 63.
OSTER. n. f. [osier, French.] A tree of the willow kind, growing by the water, of which the twigs are used for basket-work.
The rank of osters, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right hand, brings you to the place. Shak.
Ere the sun advance his burning eye,
I must fill up this oster cage of ours
With baleful weeds and precious juiced flowers. Shakefp.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and osters cut,
Nor all the winter long thy hay rick shut. May's Virg.
Like her no nymph can willing osters bend,
In basket-works, which painted streaks commend. Dryd.
Along the marshes spread,
We made the oster fringed bank our bed. Po. Odys.
OSMUND. n. f. A plant. It is sometimes used in medicine.
It grows upon bogs in divers parts of England. Miller.
OSPRAY. n. f. [corrupted from offspring, Latin.] The sea-eagle, of which it is reported, that when he hovers in the air, all the fish in the water turn up their bellies, and lie still for him to seize which he pleases. Hanmer.
I think he'll be to Rome
As is the ospray to the fish who takes it,
By sovereignty of nature.
Among the fowls shall not be eaten, the eagle, the osprag, and the ospray. Numbers xi. 13.
OSSELET. n. f. [French.] A little hard substance arising on the inside of a horse's knee, among the small bones; it grows out of a gummy substance which fastens those bones together. Farrier's Dict.
OSSICLE. n. f. [ossiculum, Latin.] A small bone.
There are three very little bones in the ear, upon whose right constitution depends the due tension of the tympanum; and if the action of one little muscle, which serves to draw one of these ossicles, fix to the tympanum, be lost or abated, the tension of that membrane ceasing, sound is hindered from coming into the ear. Holder on Speech.
OSSIFIC. adj. [ossa and facio, Lat.] Having the power of making bones, or changing carnosous or membranous bony substance.
If the caries be superficial, and the bone firm, you may by medicaments consume the moisture in the caries, dry the bone, and dispose it, by virtue of its ossific faculty, to thrust out a callus, and make separation of its caries. Wise man.
OSSIFICATION. n. f. [from ossify.] Change of carnosous, membranous, or cartilaginous, into bony substance.
Ossifications or indurations of the artery, appear so constantly in the beginnings of aneurisms, that it is not easy to judge whether they are the cause or the effect of them. Sharp.
OSTFRAGE. n. f. [ostifraga, Lat. ostifragus, Fr.] A kind of eagle, whose flesh is forbid under the name of gryphon. The ostif- fraga or osprag, is thus called, because it breaks the bones of animals in order to come at the marrow. It is said to dig up bodies in church-yards, and eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occasion that the Latins called it avis bustaria. Cabinet.
Among the fowls shall not be eaten the eagle and the ostifraga, and the osprag. Numb. xi. 13.
To OSSIFY. v. a. [ossa and facio.] To change to bone.
The dilated aorta every where in the neighbourhood of the cyst is generally ossified. Sharp's Surgery.
OSSIVOROUS. adj. [ossa and vorare.] Devouring bones.
The bore of the gullet is not in all creatures alike answerable to the body or stomach: as in the fox, which feeds on bones, and swallows whole, or with little chewing; and next in a dog and other ossivorous quadrupeds, it is very large. Darham's Physic-Thes.
OSSUARY. n. f. [ossuarium, Lat.] A charnel house; a place where the bones of dead people are kept. Di.
OST. n. f. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried. Di.
OST. n. f. A vessel upon which hops or malt are dried. Di.
OSTENSIVE. adj. [ostentis, Fr. ostendo, Lat.] Showing; betokening.

O'STENT. n. f. [ostentum, Latin.]
1. Appearance; air; manner; mien.
Use all th' observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent,
To please his grandam. Shakefp. Merch. of Ven.
2. Show; token. These senses are peculiar to Shakefp.
Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there. Shakefp.
3. A portent; a prodigy; any thing ominous.
Latinus, frighted with this dire ostent,
For counsel to his father Faunus went;
And fought the shades renew'd for prophecy,
Which near Albania's sulph'rous fountain lie. Dryden.
OSTENTATION. n. f. [ostentatio, Fr. ostentatio, Lat.]
1. Outward show; appearance.
If these shows be not outward, which of you But is four Volscians? —
—March on my fellows;
Make good this ostentation, and you shall Divide in all with us. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
You are come
A market-maid to Rome, and have prevented
The ostentation of our love. Shakefp.
2. Ambitious display; boast; vain show. This is the usual sense.
If all these secret springs of detraction fail, yet a vain ostentation of wit sets a man on attacking an established name, and sacrificing it to the mirth and laughter of those about him. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 256.
He knew that good and bountiful minds were sometimes inclined to ostentation, and ready to cover it with pretence of inciting others by their example, and therefore checks this vanity: Take heed, says he, that you do not your alms before men, to be seen. Atterbury.
3. A show; a spectacle. Not in use.
The king would have me present the princes with some delightful ostentation, show, pageant, antic, or firework.
Shakefp.'s Love's Lab. Lost.
OSTENTATIOUS. adj. [ostentus, Latin.] Boastful; vain; fond of show; fond to expose to view.
Your modesty is so far from being ostentatious of the good you do, that it blushes even to have it known; and therefore I must leave you to the satisfaction of your own conscience, which, though a silent panegyric, is yet the best. Dryden.
They let Ulysses into his disposition, and he seems to be ignorant, credulous, and ostentatious. Brown on the Odyss.
OSTENTATIOUSLY. adv. [from ostentatious.] Vainly; boastfully.
OSTENTATIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ostentatious.] Vanity; boastfulness.
OSTENTA'TOUR. n. f. [ostentateur, Fr. ostento, Lat.] A boaster;
a vain setter to show.
OSTEOCOLLA. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόλλα; ostecolla, Fr.] Ostecolla is frequent in Germany, and has long been famous for bringing on a callus in fractured bones; but the present practice with us takes no notice of it. Hill's Mat. Med.
Ostecolla is a spar, generally coarse, concentered with earthy or stony matter, precipitated by water, and incrustated upon sticks, stones, and other like bodies. Woodward.
OSTEOCOPE. n. f. [ὀστέον and κόπος; ostecope, Fr.] Pains in the bones, or rather in the nerves and membranes that encompass them. Di.
OSTEOLOGY. n. f. [ὀστέον and λόγος; ostecologie, Fr.] A description of the bones.
Richard Farlow, well known for his acuteness in dissection of dead bodies, and his great skill in ostecology, has now laid by that practice. Tatler, N<sup>o</sup>. 62.
OSTIARY. n. f. [ostium, Lat.] The opening at which a river disembogues itself.
It is generally received, that the Nilus hath seven ostiaries, that is, by seven channels disburtheneth itself unto the sea.
Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.
OSTLER. n. f. [hstelier, French.] The man who takes care of horses at an inn.
The smith, the ostler, and the boot-catcher, ought to partake. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
OSTLERY. n. f. [hstelerie, French.] The place belonging to the ostler.
OSTRACISM. n. f. [ὀστρακισμός; ostracisme, Fr.] A manner of passing sentence, in which the note of acquittal or condemnation was marked upon a shell which the voter threw into a vessel. Banishment; publick censure.
Virtue in courtiers hearts
Suffers an ostracism, and departs;
Profit, ease, fitness, plenty, bid it go,
But whither, only knowing you, I know. Donne.
Publick envy is as an ostracism, that eclipseth men when they grow too great; and therefore it is a bridle to keep them within bounds. Bacon's Essays, N<sup>o</sup>. 9.
Hyperbolus by suffering did traduce
The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleaveland.

OTH

This man, upon a slight and false accusation of favouring arbitrary power, was banished by ostracism; which in English would signify, that they voted he should be removed from their presence and council for ever. Swift.

OSTRA'CITES. n. f. Ostracites expresses the common oyster in its fossil state, under whatever circumstances it has been petrified. Hill's Mat. Med.

O'STRICH. n. f. [ostruche, Fr. struthio, Lat.] Ostrich is ranged among birds. It is very large, its wings very short, and the neck about four or five spans. The feathers of its wings are in great esteem, and are used as an ornament for hats, beds, canopies: they are stained of several colours, and made into pretty tufts. They are hunted by way of course, for they never fly; but use their wings to assist them in running more swiftly. The ostrich swallows bits of iron or brass, in the same manner as other birds will swallow small stones or gravel, to assist in digesting or comminuting their food. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the sand, and the sun hatches them. Calmet.

I'll make thee eat iron like an ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin, ere thou and I part. Shaksp.
Gavest thou the goodly wings unto the peacock? or wings and feathers unto the ostrich. Jeb xxxix. 13.

The Scots errant fight, and fight to eat,
Their ostrich stomachs make their swords their meat. Claver.

Modern ostriches are dwindled to meer larks, in comparison with those of the ancients. Arbutnot.

OTACOU'STICK. n. f. [otca and otus; otacoustique, Fr.] An instrument to facilitate hearing.

In a hare, which is very quick of hearing, it is supplied with a bony tube; which, as a natural otacoustick, is so directed backward, as to receive the smallest and most distant sound that comes behind her. Grew's Coptol. b. i.

OTHER. pron. [oðer, Sax. autre, Fr.]

1. Not the same; not this; different.

Of good actions some are better than other some. Hosker.

Will it not be received

That they have don't, Shaksp. K. Lear.

Who dares receive it other?
He that will not give just occasion to think, that all government in the world is the product only of force and violence, and that men live together by no other rules but that of beasts, where the strongest carries; and so lay a foundation for perpetual disorder and mischief, tumult, sedition and rebellion; things that the followers of that hypothesis so loudly cry out against, must of necessity find out another state of government. Locke.

No leaves shall ever be made other than leaves for years not exceeding thirty-one, in possession, and not in reversion or remainder. Reverfon.

2. Not I, or he, but some one else.

I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels and this other's house. Shaksp.

Physicians are some of them so conformable to the humour of the patient, as they press not the true cure of the disease; and some other are so regular in proceeding according to art, as they respect not the condition of the patient. Bacon, Essay 31.

The dismayed matrons and maidens, some in their houses, other some in the churches with floods of tears and lamentable cries, poured forth their prayers to the Almighty, craving his help in that their hard distress. Kneller.

The king had all he crav'd, or could compel,
And all was done—let others judge how well. Daniel.

3. Not the one, not this, but the contrary.

There is that controlling worth in goodness, that the will cannot but like and desire it; and on the other side, that odious deformity in vice, that it never offers itself to the affections of mankind, but under the disguise of the other. South.

4. Correlative to each.

In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil. ii. 3.

Scotland and thou did each in other live,
Nor would'st thou her, nor could the thee survive. Dryd.

5. Something besides.

The learning of Latin being nothing but the learning of words, join as much other real knowledge with it as you can. Locke on Education, f. 169.

6. The next.

Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first;
A third is like the former. Shaksp. Macbeth.

7. The third part.

Bind my hair up: as 'twas yesterday:
No, nor the t' other day. Ben. Johnson.

8. It is sometimes put elliptically for other thing; something different.

I can expect no other from those that judge by single sights and rash measures, than to be thought fond or insolent. Glauco.

OTHERGATES. adv. [other and gate, for way.] In another manner.

OVE

If Sir Toby had not been in drink, he would have tickled you othergates than he did. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

OTHERWISE. adj. [other and wise.] This is often mistaken, and sometimes written othergates. Of another kind.

OTHERWHERE. adv. [other and where.] In other places.

As Jews they had access to the temple and synagogues, but as Christians they were of necessity forced otherwhere to assemble themselves. Hosker, b. v. f. 11.

His godlike acts, and his temptations fierce,
And former sufferings, otherwhere are found. Milton.

OTHERWHILE. adv. [other and while.] At other times.

OTHERWISE. adv. [other and wise.]

1. In an indifferent manner.

They only plead, that whatsoever God revealeth, as necessary for all Christian men to do and believe, the same we ought to embrace, whether we have received it by writing or otherwise, which no man denieth. Hosker, b. i.

The whole church hath not tied the parts unto one and the same thing, they being therein left each to their own choice, may either do as others do, or else otherwise, without any breach of duty at all. Hosker, b. iv. f. 13.

In these good things, what all others should practise, we should scarce know to practise otherwise. Sprat.

Thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But heaven thought otherwise. Addison's Cat.

2. By other causes.

Sir John Norris failed in the attempts of Lisbon, and returned with the loss, by sickness and otherwise, of eight thousand men. Raleigh.

3. In other respects.

It is said truly, that the best men otherwise, are not always the best in regard of society. Hosker, b. i.

Men seldom consider God any otherwise than in relation to themselves, and therefore want some extraordinary benefits to excite their attention and engage their love. Roger.

OTTER. n. f. [otter, Saxon.] An amphibious animal that preys upon fish.

The toes of the otter's hinder feet, for the better swimming, are joined together with a membrane, as in the beaver, from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine; and in his tail, which is folio, or a long taper: so that he may not be unskillfully called putorius aquaticus, or the water pole-cat. He makes himself burrows on the water side, as a beaver; is sometimes tamed and taught, by nimbly surrounding the fishes to drive them into the net. Grew.

At the lower end of the hall is a large otter's skin stuffed with hay. Addison's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 115.

Would you preserve a numerous finny race?
Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase;
Th' amphibious monster ranges all the shores,
Darts thro' the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores. Gay.

OVAL. adj. [ovale, Fr. ovum, an egg.] Oblong; resembling the longitudinal section of an egg.

The mouth is low and narrow, but, after having entered pretty far in the grotto, opens itself on both sides in a oval figure of an hundred yards. Addison on Italy.

Mercurius, nearest to the central sun,
Does in an oval orbit, circling run;
But rarely is the object of our fight,
In solar glory sunk. Blackmore on Creat. b. ii.

OVAL. n. f.

A synonymous word, or a mere negation of the contrary; a translation of the word into another tongue, or a grammatical explication of it, is sometimes sufficient; as a triangle is that which has three angles, or an oval is that which has the shape of an egg. Watts's Logic.

OVARIOUS. adj. [from ovum.] Consisting of eggs.

He to the rocks
Dire clinging gathers his ovarious food. Thomson.

O'VARY. n. f. [ovaire, Fr. ovarium, Latin.] The part of the body in which impregnation is performed.

The ovary or part where the white involveth it, is in the second region of the matrix, which is somewhat long and inverted. Brewster's V. Err. b. iii.

OVA'TION. n. f. [ovation, Fr. ovatio, Lat.] A lesser triumph among the Romans allowed to those commanders who had won a victory without much blood shed, or defeated some less formidable enemy. Ditt.

OUBAT. n. f. A sort of caterpillar; an insect. Ditt.

OVE

of the cake, the heat of the oven, and the baking. Shaksp.

Bats have been found in ovens and other hollow close places, matted one upon another; and therefore it is likely that they sleep in the winter, and eat nothing. Bacon.

OVER. prep. [usar, Gothick; oppe, Saxon.]

1. Above; with respect to excellence or dignity.

How happy some, o'er other some can be!
Thro' Athens I am thought as fair as she. Shaksp.

Young Pallas shone conspicuous o'er the rest;
Gilded his arms, embroider'd was his vest. Dryden.

High, o'er all, was your great conduct shown,
You fought our safety, but forgot your own. Dryden.

The commentary which attends this poem, will have one advantage o'er most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures. Advert. to Pope's Dunciad.

And it will afford field enough for a divine to enlarge on, by shewing the advantages which the Christian world has o'er the Heathen. Swift.

2. Above, with regard to rule or authority.

The church has o'er her bishops, able to silence the factious, no less by their preaching than by their authority. South.

Captain, yourself are the fittest to live and reign not o'er, but next and immediately under the people. Dryden.

3. Above in place.

He was more than o'er shoes in love. Shaksp.

The street should see as the walk o'er head. Shaksp.

Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care;
O'er whole heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.

4. Across; as, he leaped o'er the brook.

Certain lakes and pits, such as that of Avennes poison birds which fly o'er them. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The geese fly o'er the barn, the bees in arms
Drive headlong from their waxen cells in swarms. Dryd.

5. All the world o'er, those that received not the commands of Christ and his doctrines of purity and perseverance, were finally destroyed. Hammond.

6. Upon.

Wife governours have as great a watch o'er fames, as they have of the actions and delicias. Bacon.

Angelic quires
Sung heav'nly anthems of his victory
O'er temptation and the tempter proud. Milton.

7. Before. This is only used in o'er night.

On their intended journey to proceed,
And o'er night whatso thereto did need. Hubbard.

O'VER. adv.

1. Above the top.

Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running o'er, shall men give. Luke vi. 38.

2. More than a quantity assigned.

Even here likewise the laws of nature and reason be of necessary use; yet somewhat o'er and besides them is necessary, namely human and positive law. Hosker, b. i.

And when they had met it, he that gathered much had nothing o'er, and he that gathered little had no lack. Ex. xvi. 18.

The ordinary soldiers having all their pay, and a month's pay o'er, were sent into their countries. Hayward.

The eastern people determined their digit by the breadth of barley corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth: a small matter o'er or under. Arbutnot.

3. From side to side.

The fan of an Indian king, made of the feathers of a peacock's tail, composed into a round form, bound altogether with a circular rim, above a foot o'er. Grew.

4. From one to another.

This golden cluster the herald delivereth to the Tirsan, who delivereth it o'er to that son that he had formerly chosen. Bacon's New Atlantis.

5. From a country beyond the sea.

It hath a white berry, but is not brought o'er with the coral. Bacon's Nat. History.

They brought new customs and new vices o'er;
Taught us more arts than honest men require. Philips.

6. On the surface.

The first came out red all o'er, like an hairy garment. Gen. xxv. 25.

7. Past. This is rather the sense of an adjective.

Soliman pausing a little upon the matter, the heat of his fury being something o'er, suffered himself to be intreated. Kneller's Hist. of the Turks.

OVE

Meditate upon the effects of anger; and the best time to do this, is to look back upon anger when the fit is over. Bacon.

What the garden choicest bears
To fit and taste, till this meridian heat

Be over, and the sun more cool decline. Milton.

The act of stealing was soon over, and cannot be undone, and for it the sinner is only answerable to God or his vicegerent. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

He will, as soon as his first surprize is over, justly begin to wonder how such a favour came to be bestowed on him. Atterbury's Sermons.

There youths and nymphs in comfort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day;
With me, alas! with me those joys are o'er,
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more. Pope.

8. Throughout; completely.

Well,

Have you read o'er the letters I sent you? Shaksp.

Let them argue o'er all the topics of divine goodness and human weakness, yet how trifling must be their plea! South's Sermons.

9. With repetition; another time.

He o'er and o'er divides him, Shaksp.

'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness,
Sitting or standing still confus'd to roar.

In the same verse, the same rules o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Longing they look, and gazing at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight. Dryden.

Thou, my Hector, art thyself alone,
My parents, brothers, and my lord in one:
O kill not all my kindred o'er again,

that himself was guilty of putting tricks upon himself?

He has afforded us only the twilight of probability; suitable to that state of mediocrity he has placed us in here; wherein to check our over-confidence and presumption, we might, by every day's experience, be made sensible of our short-sightedness.

This part of grammar has been much neglected, as some others over-diligently cultivated. It is easy for men to write one after another, of cases and genders.

It is an ill way of establishing this truth, and silencing atheists, to take some men's having that idea of God in their minds, for the only proof of a deity; and out of an over-fundness of that darling invention, cashier all other arguments.

A grown person surfeiting with honey, no sooner hears the name of it, but his fancy immediately carries sickness and qualms to his stomach: had this happened to him by an over-dose of honey, when a child, all the same effects would have followed, but the cause would have been mistaken, and the antipathy counted natural.

He over-acted his part; his passions, when once let loose, were too impetuous to be managed.

Take care you over-burn not the turf; it is only to be burnt so as may make it break.

Don't over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby nauseate and grow tired of a particular subject.

The memory of the learner should not be too much crowded with a tumultuous heap of ideas, one idea effaces another.

An over-greedy grasp does not retain the largest handful.

To OVER-ABOUND. v. n. [over and abound.] To abound more than enough.

Both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, to rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'er-abound.

The learned, never over-abounding in transitory coin, should not be disconcerted.

To OVER-ACT. v. a. [over and act.] To act more than enough.

You over-act, when you should underdo.

A little call yourself again, and think.
Princes courts may over-act their reverence, and make themselves laughed at for their foolishness and extravagant relative worship.

Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety, by over-acting some things in religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned.

To OVER-ARCH. v. a. [over and reach.] To cover as with an arch.

Where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent woods.

To OVER-AWE. v. a. [over and awe.] To keep in awe by superior influence.

The king was present in person to overlook the magistrates, and to over-awe these subjects with the terror of his sword.

Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice.

I could be content to be your chief tormentor, ever paying you mock reverence, and founding in your ears, the empty title which inspired you with presumption, and over-awed my daughter to comply.

A thousand fears Still over-awe when she appears.

To OVER-BALANCE. v. a. To weigh down; to preponderate.

Not doubting but by the weight of reason I should counterpoise the over-balance of any factions.

The hundred thousand pounds per annum, wherein we over-balance them in trade, must be paid us in money.

When these important considerations are set before a rational being, acknowledging the truth of every article, should a bare single possibility be of weight enough to over-balance them.

To OVER-BALANCE. n. f. [over and balance.] Something more than equivalent.

Our exported commodities would, by the return, encrease the treasure of this kingdom above what it can ever be by other means, than a mighty over-balance of our exported to our imported commodities.

The mind should be kept in a perfect indifference, not inclining to either side, any further than the over-balance of probability gives it the turn of assent and belief.

To OVER-BATTLE. adj. [Of this word I know not the derivation; batten is to grow fat, and to battle, is at Oxford to feed on trash.] Too trifling, exuberant.

In the church of God sometimes it cometh to pass, as in over-battle grounds, the fertile disposition whereof is good, yet because it exceedeth due proportion, it bringeth abundantly through too much rankness, things less profitable, whereby that which principally it should yield, being either prevented in place or defrauded of nourishment, faileth.

To OVER-BEAR. v. a. [over and bear.] To repress; to subdue; to whelm; to bear down.

What more savage than man, if he see himself able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws.

My desire
All continent impediment would over-bear,
That did oppose my will.

The ocean o'er-peering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous hafts
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head
O'er-bears your officers.

Our counsel, it pleas'd your highness
To over-bear.

Gloster, thou shalt well perceive,
That nor in birth or for authority,
The bishop will be over-borne by thee.

The Turkish commanders, with all their forces, assailed the city, thrusting their men into the breaches by heaps, as if they would, with very multitude, have discouraged or over-born the Christians.

The point of reputation, when news first came of the battle lost, did over-bear the reason of war.

Yet fortune, valour, all is over-born,
By numbers; as the long resisting bank
By the impetuous torrent.

A body may as well be over-born by the violence of a shallow, rapid stream, as swallowed up in the gulph of smooth water.

Crowding on the last the first impel;
Till over-born with weight the Cyprians fell.

The judgment, if swayed by the over-bearing of passion, and stored with lubricious opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, will be erroneous.

Take care that the memory of the learner be not too much crowded with a tumultuous heap, or over-bearing multitude of documents at one time.

The horror or loathsomeness of an object may over-bear the pleasure which results from its greatness, novelty, or beauty.

To OVER-BID. v. a. [over and bid.] To offer more than equivalent.

You have o'er-bid all my past sufferings,
And all my future too.

To OVER-BLOW. v. n. [over and blow.] To be past its violence.

To OVER-BLOW. v. a. [over and blow.] To drive away as clouds before the wind.

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Until the blustering storm is over-blown.

All those tempests being over-blown, there long after arose a new storm which over-run all Spain.

This agree fit of fear is over-blown,
An easy talk it is to win our own.

Some angel that beholds her there,
Instruct us to record what she was here;
And when this cloud of sorrow's o'er-blown,
Thro' the wide world we'll make her graces known.

Seiz'd with secret joy,
When storms are over-blown.

To OVER-BOARD. adv. [over and board. See BOARD.] Off the ship; out of the ship.

The great assembly met again; and now he that was the cause of the tempest being thrown over-board, there were hopes a calm should ensue.

A merchant having a vessel richly fraught at sea in a storm, there is but one certain way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading over-board.

The trembling dotard, to the deck he drew,
And hoisted up and over-board he threw;
This done, he scised the helm.

He obtained liberty to give them only one song before he leaped over-board, which he did, and then plunged into the sea.

Though great ships were commonly bad sea-boats, they had a superior force in a sea engagement: the shock of them being sometimes so violent, that it would throw the crew on the upper deck of lesser ships over-board.

To OVER-BULK. v. a. [over and bulk.] To oppress by bulk.

The feeding pride,
In rank Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Of shedding, breed a nursery of like evils,
To over-bulk us all.

To OVER-BURDEN. v. a. [over and burden.] To load with too great weight.

If he were not cloyed with his company, and that she thought not the earth over-burthened with him, she would cool his fiery grief.

OVE

To OVER-BUY. v. a. [over and buy.] To buy too dear.

He, when want requires, is only wise,
Who flights not foreign aids, nor over-buys;
But on our native strength, in time of need, relies.

To OVER-CARRY. v. a. [over and carry.] To hurry too far; to be urged to any thing violent or dangerous.

He was the king's uncle, but yet of no capacity to succeed; by reason whereof his natural affection and duty was less easy to be over-carried by ambition.

To OVER-CAST. v. a. part. over-cast. [over and cast.] 1. To cloud; to darken; to cover with gloom.

The day with clouds was sudden over-cast.

He, Robin, over-cast the night;
The starry welkin cover thou anon,
With drooping fogs, as black as Acheron.

Our days of age are sad and over-cast, in which we find that of all our vain passions and affections past, the sorrow only abideth.

I of fumes and humid vapours made,
No cloud in so serene a mansion find,
To over-cast her ever-shining mind.

Those clouds that over-cast our morn shall fly,
Dispell'd to farthest corners of the sky.

The dawn is over-cast, the morning lours,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day.

To cover. This sense is hardly retained but by needle-women, who call that which is incircled with a thread, over-cast.

When malice would work that which is evil, and in working avoid the suspicion of an evil intent, the colour where-with it over-casteth itself is always a fair and plausible pretence of seeking to further that which is good.

Their arms abroad with gray moss over-cast,
And their green leaves trembling with every blast.

To OVER-CHARGE. v. a. [over and charge.] 1. To oppress; to cloy; to furcharge.

On air we feed in every instant, and on meats but at times; and yet the heavy load of abundance, wherewith we oppress and over-charge nature, maketh her to sink unawares in the mid-way.

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating, as wiser by always reading. Too much over-charges nature, and turns more into disease than nourishment.

To load; to crowd too much.

Our language is over-charged with consonants.

To burden.
He whispers to his pillow,
The secrets of his over-charged soul.

To rate too high.
Here's Gloster, a foe to citizens,
O'er-charging your free purses with large fines.

To fill too full.
Her heart is but o'er-charg'd; she will recover.

The fumes of passion do as really intoxicate, and confound the judging and discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brain of a man over-charged with it.

If they would make distinct abstract ideas of all the varieties in human actions, the number must be infinite, and the memory over-charged to little purpose.

The action of the Iliad and Æneid in themselves exceeding short, are so beautifully extended by the invention of episodes, that they make up an agreeable story sufficient to employ the memory without over-charging it.

To load with too great a charge.

As canons over-charge'd with double cracks.

Who in deep mines, for hidden knowledge toils,
Like guns o'er-charge'd, breaks, misfires, or recoils.

To OVER-CLOUD. v. a. [over and cloud.] To cover with clouds.

The silver empress of the night
O'er-clouded, glimmers in a fainter light.

To OVER-CLOY. v. a. [over and cloy.] To fill beyond satiety.

A scum of Britons and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloyed country vomits forth
To desperate adventures and destruction.

To OVER-COME. v. a. pret. I overcame; part. pass. overcome; anciently overcomen, as in Spenser. [overcomen, Dutch.]

1. To subdue; to conquer; to vanquish.

They overcomen, were deprived
Of their proud beauty, and the one moiety
Transformed to fish, for their bold turquedry.

This wretched woman, overcome
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been.

OVE

Of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage.

Fire by thicker air o'ercome,
And downward forc'd in earth's capacious womb,
Alters its particles; is fire no more.

To over-flow; to furcharge.

Yearly o'ercomes the granaries with stores.

To come over or upon; to invade suddenly.

Can't such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder?

To OVERCOME. v. n. To gain the superiority.

That thou mightest be justified in thy sayings, and mightest overcome when thou art judged.

To OVER-COUNT. v. a. [over and count.] To rate above the true value.

Thou know'st how much
We do o'er-count thee.

To OVER-COVER. v. a. [over and cover.] To cover completely.

Shut me nightly in a charnel house,
O'er-cover'd quite with dead mens rattling bones,
With rocky shanks and yellow chapels skulls.

To OVER-CROW. v. a. [over and crowd.] To crowd as in triumph.

A base varlet, that being but of late grown out of the dunghill, beginneth now to over-crow so high mountains, and make himself the great protector of all out-laws.

To OVER-DO. v. a. [over and do.] To do more than enough.

Any thing o'er-done is from the purpose of playing; whose end is to hold the mirror up to nature.

Nature so intent upon finishing her work, much oftener over-does than under-does. You shall hear of twenty animals with two heads, for one that hath none.

When the meat is over-done, lay the fault upon your lady who hurried you.

To OVER-DRESS. v. a. [over and dress.] To adorn lavishly.

In all, let nature never be forgot;
But treat the goddess like a modest fair,
Nor over-dress, nor leave her wholly bare.

To OVER-DRIVE. v. a. [over and drive.] To drive too hard, or beyond strength.

The flocks and herds with young, if men should over-drive one day, all will die.

To OVER-EYE. v. a. [over and eye.] 1. To superintend.

2. To observe; to remark.

I am doubtful of your modesties,
Left o'er-eying of his odd behaviour,
You break into some merry passion.

To OVER-EMPTY. v. a. [over and empty.] To make too empty.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in new-fangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter, which might over-empty their husbands purses.

To OVER-FLOAT. v. n. [over and float.] To swim; to float.

The town is fill'd with slaughter, and o'er-floats
With a red deluge, their increasing moats.

To OVER-FLOW. v. n. [over and flow.] 1. To be fuller than the brim can hold.

While our strong walls secure us from the foe,
E'er yet with blood our ditches over-flow.

Had I the same consciousness that I saw Noah's flood, as that I saw the over-flowing of the Thames last winter, I could not doubt, that I who saw the Thames over-flowed, and viewed the flood at the general deluge, was the same self.

To exuberate.

A very ungrateful return to the author of all we enjoy, but such as an over-flowing plenty too much inclines men to make.

To OVER-FLOW. v. a.

1. To fill beyond the brim.

Suppose thyself in as great a sadness as ever did load thy spirit, wouldst thou not bear it cheerfully if thou wert sure that some excellent fortune would relieve and recompense thee so as to over-flow all thy hopes.

New milk that all the winter never fails,
And all the summer over-flows the pails.

To deluge; to drown; to over-run; to over-power.

The Scythians, at such time as the northern nations over-flawed all Christendom, came down to the sea-coast.

Do not the Nile and the Niger make yearly inundations in our days, as they have formerly done? and are not the countries countries so over-flown, still situate between the tropicks?

OVE

Sixteen hundred and odd years after the earth was made, it was over-flowed and destroyed in a deluge of water, that overflooded the face of the whole earth, from pole to pole, and from east to west.

Thus oft by mariners are shewn,
Earl Godwin's castles over-flown.
O'VER-FLOW. n. f. [over and flow.] Inundation; more than fulness; such a quantity as runs over; exuberance.

Did he break out into tears?
In great measure—

A kind over-flow of kindness.
Where there are great over-flows in fens, the drowning of them in winter maketh the summer following more fruitful; for that it keepeth the ground warm.

It requires pains to find the coherence of abstruse writings: so that it is not to be wondered, that St. Paul's epistles have, with many, passed rather for disjointed pious discourses, full of warmth and zeal and over-flows of light, rather than for calm, strong, coherent reasonings all through.

After every over-flow of the Nile, there was not always a menuration.

If this softens not the expression, it may be ascribed to an over-flow of gratitude in the general disposition of Ulysses.

O'VER-FLOWING. n. f. [from over-flow.] Exuberance; copiousness.

When men are young, they might vent the over-flowings of their fancy that way.

When the over-flowings of ungodliness make us afraid, the ministers of religion cannot better discharge their duty of opposing it.

O'VER-FLOWINGLY. adv. [from over-flowing.] Exuberantly; in great abundance. A word not elegant nor in use.

Nor was it his indigence that forced him to make the world; but his goodness pressed him to impart the goods which he over-flowingly abounds with.

To O'VER-FLY. v. a. [over and fly.] To cross by flight.

Can scarce o'er-fly them in a day and night.
O'VER-FORWARDNESS. n. f. [over and forwardness.] Too great quickness; too great readiness.

By an over-forwardness in courts to give countenance to frivolous exceptions, though they make nothing to the true merit of the cause, it often happens that causes are not determined according to their merits.

To O'VER-FREIGHT. v. a. pret. over-freighted; part. over-fraught. [over and freight.] To load too heavily; to fill with too great quantity.

A boat over-freighted with people, in rowing down the river, was, by the extreme weather, sunk.

Grief, that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart and bids it break.

Sorrow has for o'er-fraught
This sinking barque, I shall not live to shew
How I abhor my first rash crime.

To O'VER-GET. v. a. [over and get.] To reach; to come up with.

With six hours hard riding, through so wild places, as it was rather the cunning of my horse sometimes, than of myself, so rightly to hit the way, I over-got them a little before night.

To O'VER-GLANCE. v. a. [over and glance.] To look hastily over.

I have, but with a cursory eye,
O'er-glanc'd the articles.

O'VER-GO. v. a. [over and go.] To surpass; to excel.

Thinking it beyond the degree of humanity to have a wit so far over-going his age, and such dreadful terror proceed from so excellent beauty.

Great nature hath laid down at last,
That mighty birth wherewith so long she went,
And over-went the times of ages past,
Here to lie in upon our soft content.

To O'VER-GORGE. v. a. [over and gorge.] To gorge too much.

Art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, over-gorg'd.

O'VER-GREAT. adj. [over and great.] Too great.

Though putting the mind unprepared upon an unusual stress ought to be avoided; yet this must not run it, by an over-great thyness of difficulties, into a lazy sauntering about obvious things.

To O'VER-GROW. v. a. [over and grow.] To overgrow with.

Roof and floor, and walls were all of gold,
But over-grown with dust and old decay,
And hid in darkness that none could behold
The hue thereof.

The woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,
And all their echo's mourn.

To rise above.
If the binds be very strong and much over-grown the poles, some advise to strike off their heads with a long switch.

To O'VER-GROW. v. n. To grow beyond the fit or natural size.

One part of his army, with incredible labour, cut a way thorough the thick and over-grown woods, and so came to Solymon.

A huge over-grown ox was grazing in a meadow.
Whole fortune is not over-grown.

O'VER-GROWTH. n. f. [over and growth.] Exuberant growth.

The over-growth of some complexion,
Of breaking down the pales and forts of reason.

The fortune in being the first in an invention, doth cause sometimes a wonderful over-growth in riches.

Suspected to a frequent king, who seeks
To stop their over-growth, as in mate guests Too numerous.

To O'VER-HALE. v. a. [over and hale.] To spread over.

The welked Phœbus can avail
His weary wain, and now the frosty night
Her mantle black thro' heaven over-hale.

To examine over again: as, he over-haled my account.

To O'VER-HANG. v. a. [over and hang.] To jut over; to impend over.

Lend the eye a terrible aspect,
Let the brow overwhelm it,
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'er-hang and jutting his confounded base.

Hide me ye forests, in your closest bow'rs,
Where flows the murm'ring brook, inviting dreams,
Where bord'ring hazle over-hangs the streams.

If you drink tea upon a promontory that over-hangs the sea, it is preferable to an assembly.

To O'VER-HANG. v. n. To jut over.

The rest was craggy cliff, that over-hung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb.

To O'VER-HARDEN. v. a. [over and harden.] To make too hard.

By laying it in the air, it has acquired such a hardness, that it was brittle like over-hardened steel.

O'VER-HEAD. adv. [over and head.] Aloft; in the zenith; above; in the ceiling.

O'er-head the moon
Sits arbitress, and nearer to the earth
Wheels her pale course.

The four stars over-head, represent the four children.

To O'VER-HEAR. v. a. [over and hear.] To hear those who do not mean to be heard.

I am invisible,
And I will over-hear their conference.

They had a full fight of the Infanta at a mask dancing, having over-heard two gentlemen who were tending towards that fight, after whom they pressed.

That such an enemy we have who seeks
Our ruin, both by these inform'd I learn,
And from the parting angel over-heard.

They were so loud in their discourse, that a black-berry from the next hedge over-heard them.

The nurse,
Though not the words, the murmurs over-heard.

The witness over-hearing the word pillory repeated, sunk away privately.

To O'VER-HEAT. v. a. [over and heat.] To heat too much.

Pleas'd with the form and coolness of the place,
And over-heated by the morning chase.

It must be done upon the receipt of the wound, before the patient's spirits be over-heated with pain or fever.

To O'VER-HEND. v. a. [over and bend.] To overtake; to reach.

Als his fair Leman flying through a brook,
He over-bent nought moved with her piteous look.

To O'VER-JOY. v. a. [over and joy.] To transport; to ravish.

He that puts his confidence in God only, is neither over-joyed in any great good things of this life, nor sorrowful for a little thing.

The bishop, partly astonished and partly over-joyed with these speeches, was struck into a sad silence for a time.

This love-sick virgin, over-joy'd to find
The boy alone, still follow'd him behind.

O'VER-JOY. n. f. Transport; ecstasy.

The mutual conference that my mind hath had,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister.

To O'VER-RIPEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister.

To O'VER-RIPEN. v. a. [over and ripen.] To make too ripe.

Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
Hanging the head with Ceres' plenteous load?

To OVERLA'BOUR. v. a. [over and labour.] To take too much pains on any thing; to harass with toil.

She without noise will over-see
His children and his family;
And order all things till he come,
Sweaty and over-labour'd home.

To OVERLA'DE. v. a. [over and lade.] To over-burthen.

Thus to throng and over-lade a foul
With love, and then to have a room for fear,
That shall all that controul,
What is it but to rear
Our passions and our hopes on high,
That thence they may decay

The noblest way how to despair and die?

OVERLA'KE. adj. [over and large.] Larger than enough.

Our attainments cannot be over-large, and yet we manage a narrow fortune very unthrifly.

OVERLA'STINGLY. n. f. [over and last.] With exaggeration.

A mean word, now obsolete.

Although I be far from their opinion who write too over-layingly, that the Arabian tongue is in use in two third parts of the inhabited world, yet I find that it extendeth where the religion of Mahomet is professed.

To OVERLAY. v. a. [over and lay.]

1. To oppress by too much weight or power.

Some commons are barren, the nature is such,
And some over-layeth the commons too much.

Not only that mercy which keepeth from being over-laid and oppress'd, but mercy which saveth from being touched with grievous miseries.

When any country is over-laid by the multitude which live upon it, there is a natural necessity compelling it to dis-burthen itself and lay the load upon others.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and over-laid by the other.

Good laws had been antiquated by the course of time, or over-laid by the corruption of manners.

Our sins have over-laid our hopes.

The strong Emertius came in Argite's aid,
And Palamon with odds was over-laid.

2. To smother with too much or too close covering.

Nor then destroys it with too fond a flay,
Like mothers, which their infants over-lay.

3. To smother; to crush; to overwhelm.

Ships burnt in fight, or forc'd on rocky shores,
The new-born babes by nurses over-laid.

They quickly stifled and over-laid those infant principles, of piety and virtue, sown by God in their hearts; so that they brought a voluntary darkness and stupidity upon their minds.

The gods have made your noble mind for me,
And her insipid soul for Ptolemy:
A heavy lump of earth without desire,
A heap of ashes that o'er-lays your fire.

The stars, no longer over-laid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mists,
And upward shoot.

Season the passions of a child with devotion, which seldom dies; though it may seem extinguished for a while, it breaks out as soon as misfortunes have brought the man to himself.

The fire may be covered and over-laid, but cannot be entirely quenched and smothered.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust to the fund of their own reason, advanced but not over-laid by commerce with books.

4. To cloud; to over-cast.

Phœbus' golden face it did attain,
As when a cloud his beams doth over-lay.

5. To cover superficially.

The over-laying of their chapters was of silver, and all the pillars were filleted with silver.

By his precept a sanctuary is fram'd
Of cedar, over-laid with gold.

6. To join by something laid over.

Thou us impow'rd
To fortify thus far, and over-lay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

To OVERLEAP. v. a. [over and leap.] To pass by a jump.

A step
On which I must fall down or else o'er-leap,
For in my way it lies.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land;
If daring thips and men prophane,
Th' eternal fences over-leap,
And pass at will the boundless deep.

To OVER-MIX. v. a. [over and mix.] To mix with too much.
Thoſe things theſe parts o'er-rule, no joys ſhall know,
Or little pleaſure over-mix with woe. Greecb.
To OVERMIST. adj. [over and miſt.] Highſt; over the reſt in authority. Anſ.
To OVERMUCH. adj. [over and much.] Too much; more than enough.
It was the cuſtom of thoſe former ages, in their over-much gratitude, to advance the firſt authors of any uſeful diſcovery among the number of their gods. Wilkins.
An over-much uſe of ſails, beſides that it occasions thirſt

To OVERMUCH. adv. In too great a degree.
The fault which we find in them is, that they over-much abridge the church of her power in theſe things. Whereupon they re-charge us, as if in theſe things we gave the church a liberty which hath no limits or bounds. Hooker.
Perhaps
I alſo erred, in over-much admiring
What ſeem'd in thee fo perfect, that I thought
No evil durſt attempt thee. Milton's Par. Loſt, b. ix.
Dejeat not then fo over-much thyſelf,
Who haſt of ſorrow thy full load beſides. Milton.
To OVERMUCH. n. f. More than enough.
By attributing over-much to things
Leſs excellent, as thou thyſelf perceiv'ſt. Milton.
With reſpect to the bleſſings the world enjoys, even good men may alcribe over-much to themſelves. Grew.
To OVERMUCHNESS. n. f. [from over-much.] Exuberance; ſuperabundance.
There are words that do as much raiſe a ſtile, as others can depreſs it; ſuperlatives and over-muchneſs amplifies. It may be above faith, but not above a mean. Ben. Jaiſon.
To OVERNIGHT. n. f. [over and night.] This ſeems to be uſed by Shakeſpeare as a noun, but by Addiſon more properly, as I have before placed it, as a noun with a prepoſition. Night before bed-time.
If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been o'er-taken. Shakeſpeare.
Will confeſs, that for half his life his head ached every morning with reading men over-night. Addiſon.
To OVERNAME. v. a. [over and name.] To name in a ſeries.
Over-name them; and as thou nameſt them I will deſcribe them. Shakeſp. Merch. of Venice.
To OVEROFFICE. v. a. [over and office.] To lord by virtue of an office.
This might be the fate of a politician which this aſs over- office. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
To OVEROFFICIOUS. adj. [over and officious.] Too buſy; too importunate.
This is an over-officious truth, and is always at a man's heels; ſo that if he looks about him, he muſt take notice of
it. Collier on Human Reſon.
To OVERPASS. v. a. [over and paſs.]
1. To croſs.
I flood on a wide river's bank,
Which I muſt needs o'er-paſs,
When on a ſudden Torriſmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When theſe they o'er-paſs, and thoſe they ſhun? Dryden.
2. To over-look; to paſs with diſregard.
The complaint about palms and hymns might as well be over-paſs without any answer, as it is without any cauſe brought forth. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the eaſt
He ſlightly view'd, and ſlightly over-paſs'd. Milton.
3. To omit in a reckoning.
Arithmetical progrefſion demonſtrates how faſt mankind would increaſe, over-paſſing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Iſraelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from ſeventy to ſixty thouſand able men. Raleigh.
4. To omit; not to receive.
If the grace of him which ſaveth over-paſs ſome, ſo that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteousneſs. Hooker.
To OVERPAſT. part. paſt. [from over-paſs.] Gone; paſt.
What canſt thou ſwear by now? —
—By time to come,
That thou haſt wronged in the time o'er-paſt. Shakeſp.
To OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.
Take this purſe of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again,
When I have found it. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
You have yourſelf, your kindneſs over-paid,
He ceaſes to oblige you can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleaſure hear thy lover's ſtrains,
And with one heav'nly ſmile o'er-pay his pains. Prior.
To OVERPERCH. n. f. [over and perch.] To fly over.
With love's light wings did I o'er-perch theſe walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold love out. Shakeſp.
To OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of uſe.
The ocean over-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
Your Argosies with portly ſail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curſtly to them, do them reverence. Shakeſp.
Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heap'd,
For truth to o'er-peer. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whoſe top branch o'er-peer'd Jove's ſpreading trees,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'ful wind. Shakeſp.
They are invincible by reaſon of the over-peering mountains that back the ones, and ſlender fortifications of the other to land-ward. Sandy's Javanna.
To OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains more than ſufficient.
Some other finners there are, from which that overplus of ſtrength in perſuaſion doth ariſe. Hooker's Pref.
A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus
remained ſtill in the mortar. L'Eſtrange.
It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addiſon.
To OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriouſly.
What ſupports me, doſt thou aſk?
The conſcience, friend, I have loſt them over-ply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Poem.
To OVERPOSE. v. a. [over and poſe.] To outweigh.
Whether crumples who have loſt their thighs will float;
their lungs being able to waſt up their bodies, which are in others over-poſed by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. iv.
The ſcale
O'er-weigh'd by darkneſs, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the ſummer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is loſt in night. Greecb.
To OVERPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.
Horace, in his firſt and ſecond book of odes, was ſtill riſing, but came not to his meridian till the third: After which his judgment was an over-poſe to his imagination.
He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he deſcended
in his fourth by ſlow degrees. Dryden.
Some over-poſe of ſway, by turns they ſhare,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.
To OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppreſs by ſuperiority.
Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-power'd. Mil. Par. Lyt.
As much light over-powers the eye, ſo they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with ſnow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.
Reaſon allows none to be confident, but him only who governs

When on a ſudden Torriſmond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er. Dryden.
What have my Scyllas and my Syrtis done,
When theſe they o'er-paſs, and thoſe they ſhun? Dryden.
2. To over-look; to paſs with diſregard.
The complaint about palms and hymns might as well be over-paſs without any answer, as it is without any cauſe brought forth. Hooker, b. v. f. 37.
Remember that Pellean conqueror,
A youth, how all the beauties of the eaſt
He ſlightly view'd, and ſlightly over-paſs'd. Milton.
3. To omit in a reckoning.
Arithmetical progrefſion demonſtrates how faſt mankind
would increaſe, over-paſſing as miraculous, though indeed natural, that example of the Iſraelites who were multiplied in two hundred and fifteen years, from ſeventy to ſixty thouſand
able men. Raleigh.
4. To omit; not to receive.
If the grace of him which ſaveth over-paſs ſome, ſo that the prayer of the church for them be not received, this we may leave to the hidden judgments of righteousneſs. Hooker.
To OVERPAſT. part. paſt. [from over-paſs.] Gone; paſt.
What canſt thou ſwear by now? —
—By time to come,
That thou haſt wronged in the time o'er-paſt. Shakeſp.
To OVERPAY. v. a. [over and pay.] To reward beyond the price.
Take this purſe of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay, and pay again,
When I have found it. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
You have yourſelf, your kindneſs over-paid,
He ceaſes to oblige you can upbraid. Dryden.
Wilt thou with pleaſure hear thy lover's ſtrains,
And with one heav'nly ſmile o'er-pay his pains. Prior.
To OVERPERCH. n. f. [over and perch.] To fly over.
With love's light wings did I o'er-perch theſe walls,
For ſtony limits cannot hold love out. Shakeſp.
To OVERPEER. v. a. [over and peer.] To over-look; to hover above. It is now out of uſe.
The ocean over-peering of his liſt,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haſte,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'er-bears your officers. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
Your Argosies with portly ſail,
Do over-peer the petty traffickers,
That curſtly to them, do them reverence. Shakeſp.
Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heap'd,
For truth to o'er-peer. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.
Thus yields the cedar to the ax's edge,
Whoſe top branch o'er-peer'd Jove's ſpreading trees,
And kept low ſhrubs from winter's pow'ful wind. Shakeſp.
They are invincible by reaſon of the over-peering mountains that back the ones, and ſlender fortifications of the other
to land-ward. Sandy's Javanna.
To OVERPLUS. n. f. [over and plus.] Surplus; what remains
more than ſufficient.
Some other finners there are, from which that overplus of ſtrength in perſuaſion doth ariſe. Hooker's Pref.
A great deal too much of it was made, and the overplus
remained ſtill in the mortar. L'Eſtrange.
It would look like a fable to report, that this gentleman
gives away all which is the overplus of a great fortune. Addiſon.
To OVERPLY. v. a. [over and ply.] To employ too laboriouſly.
What ſupports me, doſt thou aſk?
The conſcience, friend, I have loſt them over-ply'd,
In liberty's defence. Milton's Poem.
To OVERPOSE. v. a. [over and poſe.] To outweigh.
Whether crumples who have loſt their thighs will float;
their lungs being able to waſt up their bodies, which are in others over-poſed by the hinder legs; we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Err. b. iv.
The ſcale
O'er-weigh'd by darkneſs, lets the night prevail;
And day, that lengthen'd in the ſummer's height,
Shortens till winter, and is loſt in night. Greecb.
To OVERPOSE. n. f. [from the verb.] Preponderant weight.
Horace, in his firſt and ſecond book of odes, was ſtill riſing, but came not to his meridian till the third: After which his judgment was an over-poſe to his imagination.
He grew too cautious to be bold enough, for he deſcended
in his fourth by ſlow degrees. Dryden.
Some over-poſe of ſway, by turns they ſhare,
In peace the people, and the prince in war. Dryden.
To OVERPOWER. v. a. [over and power.] To be predominant over; to oppreſs by ſuperiority.
Now in danger try'd, now known in arms
Not to be over-power'd. Mil. Par. Lyt.
As much light over-powers the eye, ſo they who have weak eyes, when the ground is covered with ſnow, are wont to complain of too much light. Boyle.
Reaſon allows none to be confident, but him only who governs

governs the world, who knows all things, and can do all things; and therefore can neither be ſurprized nor over-powered.
South's Sermons.
After the death of Craſſus, Pompey found himſelf outwitted by Cæſar; he broke with him, over-powered him in the ſenate, and cauſed many unjuſt decrees to paſs againſt him. Dryden's Dedicat. to Æneid.
Inspiration is, when ſuch an over-pow'ring impreſſion of any propoſition is made upon the mind by God himſelf, that gives a convincing and indubitable evidence of the truth and divinity of it. Watts's Logic.
The hiſtorian makes theſe mountains the ſtandards of the riſe of the water; which they could never have been, had they not been ſtanding, when it did fo riſe and over-power the earth. Woodw. Nat. Hiſt.
To OVERPREſs. v. a. [over and preſs.] To bear upon with irreſiſtible force; to overwhelm; to cruſh.
Having an excellent horſe under him, when he was over- preſſed by ſome, he avoided them. Sidney.
Michael's arm main promontories ſlung,
And over-preſs'd whole legions weak with ſin. Rofcomm.
When a prince enters on a war, he ought maturely to conſider whether his coffers be full, his people rich by a long peace and free trade, not over-preſſed with many burthenſome taxes. Swift.
To OVERPRICE. v. a. [over and price.] To value at too high price.
Parents over-price their children, while they behold them through the vapours of affection. Wotton.
To OVERRANK. n. f. [over and rank.] Too rank.
It produces over-rank binds. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To OVERRATE. v. a. [over and rate.] To rate at too much.
While vain ſhows and icenies you over-rate,
'Tis to be fear'd,
That as a fire the former houſe o'erthrew,
Machines and tempeſts will deſtroy the new. Dryden.
To avoid the temptations of poverty, it concerns us not to over-rate the conveniences of our ſtation, and in eſtimating the proportion fit for us, to fix it rather too low than too high; for our deſires will be proportioned to our wants, real or imaginary, and our temptations to our deſires.
Rogers.
To OVERREACH. v. a. [over and reach.]
1. To riſe above.
The mountains of Olympus, Atho and Atlas, over-reach and ſurmount all winds and clouds. Raleigh.
Sixteen hundred years after the earth was made, it was overflowed in a deluge of water in ſuch exceſs, that the floods over-reach'd the tops of the hiſt mountains. Burnet.
2. To deceive; to go beyond; to circumvent. A ſagacious man is ſaid to have a long reach.
What more cruel than man, if he ſee himſelf able by fraud to over-reach, or by power to over-bear the laws whereunto he ſhould be ſubject. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.
I have laid my brain in the fun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent ſo groſs over-reaching. Shakeſp.
Shame to be overcome, or over-reach'd,
Would utmoſt vigour raiſe, and raiſ'd unite. Milton.
A man who had been matchleſs held
In cunning, over-reach'd where leaſt he thought,
To ſave his credit, and for very ſight
Still will be tempting him who ſoils him ſtill. Milton.
There is no pleaſanter encounter than a trial of ſkill betwixt ſharpers to over-reach one another. L'Eſtrange.
Forbidding, oppreſſion, deſtroying and over-reaching one another, perſidiouſneſs and treachery. Thiſon.
Such a principle is ambition, ora deſire of fame, by which many vicious men are over-reach'd, and engaged contrary to their natural inclinations in a glorious and laudable courſe of action. Addiſon's Spectator, N<sup>o</sup>. 255.
John had got an impreſſion that Lewis was ſo deadly cunning a man, that he was afraid to venture himſelf alone with him; at laſt he took heart of grace; let him come up, quoth he, it is but ſticking to my point, and he can never over- reach me. Hiſtory of J. Bull.
To OVERREACH. v. n. A horſe is ſaid to over-reach, when he brings his hinder feet too far forwards, and ſtrikes his toes againſt his fore ſhoes. Farr. Diſt.
To OVERREACHER. n. f. [from over-reach.] A cheat; a deceiver.
To OVERREAD. v. a. [over and read.] To peruſe.
The contents of this is the return of the duke; you ſhall anon over-read it at your pleaſure. Shakeſp. Hamlet.
To OVERRED. v. a. [over and red.] To ſinear with red.
Pick thy face and over-red thy fear. Shakeſp. Macbeth.
To OVERROAST. v. a. [over and roaſt.] To roaſt too much.
Thou liſt liver'd boy,
'Twas burnt and dried away,
And better 'twere, that both of us did fiſt,
Since of ourſelves, ourſelves are choleric,
Than feed it with ſuch over-roaſt'd fiſh. Shakeſp.

OVE

To OVERRULE. v. a. [over and rule.]
1. To influence with predominant power; to be ſuperior in authority.
Which humour perceiving to over-rule me, I ſtrave againſt
it. Sidney.
That which the church by her eccleſiaſtical authority ſhall probably think and deſire to be true or good, muſt in con-gruity of reaſon over-rule all other inferior arguments whatſoever. Hooker, b. v. f. 8.
Except our own private, and but probable reſolutions, be by the law of publick determinations over-ruled, we take away all poſſibility of ſociable life in the world. Hooker.
What if they be ſuch as will be over-ruled with ſome one, whom they dare not diſpleaſe. Whiteſt.
So much his paſſion and animoſity over-ruled his conſcience.
Clarendon, b. viii.
A wife man ſhall over-rule his ſtars, and have a greater influence upon his own content, than all the conſtellations and planets of the firmament. Taylor.
He is acted by a paſſion which abſolutely over-rules him;
and ſo can no more recover himſelf, than a bowl rolling down an hill ſtop itſelf in the miſt of its career. South.
'Tis temerity for men to venture their lives upon unequal encounters; unleſs where they are obliged by an over-ruling impulſe of conſcience and duty. L'Eſtrange.
A man may, by the influence of an over-ruling planet, be inclined to luſt, and yet by the force of reaſon overcome that bad influence. Swift.
2. To govern with high authority; to ſuperintend.
Wherefore does he not now come forth and openly over- rule, as in other matters he is accuſtomed? Hayward.
3. To ſuperſede: as in law to over-rule a plea is to reject it as incompetent.
Thirty acres make a farthing land, nine farthings a Cor-niſh acre, and four Corniſh acres a knights fee. But this rule is over-ruled to a greater or leſſer quantity, according to the fruitfulneſs or barrenneſs of the ſoil. Cmru.
To OVERRUN. v. a. [over and run.]
1. To harraſs by incurſions; to ravage; to rove over in a hoſtile manner.
Thoſe barbarous nations that over-ran the world, poſſeſſed thoſe dominions, whereof they are now ſo called. Spencer.
Till the tears the ſhed,
Like envious floods o'er-ran her lovely face,
She was the faireſt creature in the world. Shakeſp.
They err, who count it glorious to ſubdue
By conqueſt far and wide, to over-run
Large countries, and in field great battles win, Great cities by aſſault. Milton's Paraſite Loſt.
The nine
Their fainting foes to ſhameful flight compell'd,
And with reſtleſs force o'er-run the field. Dryden.
Gulſtavius Adolphus could not enter this part of the empire after having over-run moſt of the reſt. Addiſon.
A commonwealth may be over-run by a powerful neighbour, which may produce bad conſequences upon your trade and liberty. Swift's Miſcel.
2. To out-run.
Pyrocles being come to ſixteen, over-run his age in growth, ſtrength, and all things following it, that not Mulidorus could perform any action on horſe or foot more ſtrongly, or deliver that ſtrength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuoſly. Sidney, b. ii.
We may out-run
By violent ſwiftness, that which we run at,
And loſe by over-running. Shakeſp. Henry VIII.
Alimaz ran by the way of the plain, and over-ran Cuthi.
2 Sam. xviii. 23.
Galileus noteth, that if an open trough, wherein water is, be driven faſter than the water can follow, the water ga-thereth upon an heap towards the hinder end, where the motion began; which he ſuppoſeth, holding confidently the motion of the earth to be the cauſe of the ebbing and flowing of the ocean; becauſe the earth over-runneſs the water.
Bacon's Nat. Hiſtory.
3. To overſpread; to cover all over.
With an over-running flood he will make an utter end of the place. Nab. i. 8.
This diſpoſition of the elements and the parts of the earth, ſhews us the footſteps of ſome kind of ruin which happened in ſuch a way, that at the ſame time a general flood of waters would neceſſarily over-run the whole earth.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
4. To miſchief by great numbers; to peſter.
To flatter fooliſh men into a hope of life where there is none, is much the ſame with betraying people into an opinion, that they are in a virtuous and happy ſtate, when they are over-run with paſſion and drowned in their luſts. L'Eſtrange.
Were it not for the inceſſant labours of this indolent animal, Egypt would be over-run with crocodiles. Addiſon.
Such proviſion made, that a country ſhould not want ſprings as

OVE

as were convenient for it; nor be over-run with them, and afford little or nothing else; but a supply every where suitable to the necessities of each climate and region of the globe. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

5. To injure by treading down.
His tears defac'd the surface of the well,
And now the lovely face but half appears,
O'er-run with wrinkles and deform'd with tears. Addison.
6. Among printers, to be obliged to change the disposition of the lines and words in correcting, by reason of the interfections.
To OVERRUN. v. n. To overflow; to be more than full.

Though you have left me,
Yet still my soul o'er-runs with fondness towards you. Smith.
Cattle in inclosures shall always have fresh pasture, that now is all trampled and over-run. Spenser.

To OVERSEE. v. a. [over and see.]
1. To superintend; to overlook.

He had charge my discipline to frame,
And tutors nouriture to oversee. Fairy Queen.
She without noise will oversee
His children and his family. Dryden.

2. To overlook; to pass by unheeded; to omit.
I who resolve to oversee
No lucky opportunity,
Will go to council to advise
Which way t' encounter, or surpise. Hud. p. iii.

OVERSEEN. part. [from oversee.] Mistaken; deceived.
A common received error is never utterly overthrown, till such times as we go from signs unto causes, and thence some manifest root or fountain thereof common unto all, whence it may clearly appear how it hath come to pass that so many have been overseen. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

They rather observed what he had done, and suffered for the king and for his country, without farther enquiring what he had omitted to do, or been overseen in doing. Clarend.

OVERSEER. n. f. [from oversee.]
1. One who overlooks; a superintendent.

There are in the world certain voluntary overseers of all books, whose censure, in this respect, would fall sharp on us.
Hooker, b. v. f. 31.

Jehiel and Azariah were overseers under Coniah.
2 Chron. xxxi. 13.

To entertain a guest, with what a care
Wou'd he his household ornaments prepare;
Harrahs his servants, and as overseer stand,
To keep them working with a threatening wand.
Clean all my plate, he cries. Dryden.

2. An officer who has the care of the parochial provision for the poor.

The church-wardens and overseers of the poor might find it possible to discharge their duties, whereas now in the greater out-purishes many of the poorer parishioners, through neglect, do perish for want of some heedful eye to overlook them. Graunt's Bills of Mort.

To OVERSET. v. a. [over and set.]
1. To turn the bottom upwards; to throw off the basis.

The tempests met,
The sailors master'd, and the ship o'er-set. Dryden.
It is forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible perturbation, even when there is not the least breath of wind; over-setting ships in the harbours, and sinking them.
Woodw. Nat. Hist.

Would the confederacy exert itself, as much to annoy the enemy, as they do for their defence, we might bear them down with the weight of our armies, and over-set the whole power of France. Addison on the War.

2. To throw out of regularity.

His action against Catiline ruined the consul, when it saved the city; for it so felled his soul, that ever afterwards it was apt to be over-set with vanity. Dryden.

To OVERSET. v. n. To fall off the basis.

Part of the weight will be under the axle-tree, which will so far counterpoise what is above it, that it will very much prevent the over-setting. Mortimer's Hist.

To OVERSHADE. v. a. [over and shade.] To cover with any thing that causes darkness.

Black night o'er-shade thy day, and death thy life. Shaksp.
Dark cloudy death o'er-shades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us. Shaksp.
No great and mighty subject might eclipse or over-shade
the imperial power. Bacon.

If a wood of leaves o'er-shade the tree,
In vain the hind shall vex the threshing floor,
For empty chaff and straw will be thy store. Dryden.

Should we mix our friendly talk,
O'er-shaded in that fav'rite walk;
Both pleas'd with all we thought we wanted. Prior.

To OVERSHADOW. v. a. [over and shadow.]
1. To throw a shadow over any thing.

Weeds choke and over-shadow the corn, and bear it down, or starve and deprive it of nourishment. Bacon.

OVE

Death,
Let the damps of thy dull breath
O'er-shadow even the shade,
And make darkness self afraid. Cragshaw.

Darkness must over-shadow all his bounds,
Palpable darkness, and blot out three days. Milton.
2. To shelter; to protect; to cover with superiour influence.

My over-shadowing spirit and might, with thee
I fend along: ride forth and bid the deep Within appointed bounds. Milton's Par. Lost.

On her should come
The holy ghost, and the power of the highest.
O'er-shadow her. Paradise Regain'd, b. i.

To OVERSHOOT. v. n. [over and shoot.] To fly beyond the mark.

Often it drops, or over-shoots by the disproportion of difference or application. Callier on Human Reason.

To OVERSHOOT. v. a.
1. To shoot beyond the mark.

Every inordinate appetite defeats its own satisfaction, by over-shooting the mark it aims at. Tillotson.

2. [With the reciprocal pronoun.] To venture too far; to affert too much.

Leave it to themselves to consider, whether they have in this point or not over-shot themselves; which God doth know is quickly done, even when our meaning is most sincere.
Hooker, b. ii. f. 8.

In finding fault with the laws I doubt me, you shall much over-shoot yourself, and make me the more dislike your other difficulties of that government. Spenser on Ireland.

For any thing that I can learn of them, you have over-shot yourself in reckoning. Wright.

OVERSIGHT. n. f. [from over and fight.]
1. Superintendence.

They gave the money, being told unto them that had the over-sight of the house. 2 Kings xii. 11.
Feed the flock of God, taking the over-sight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly. 1 Pet. v. 2.

2. Mistake; error.

Amongst so many huge volumes, as the infinite pains of St. Augustine have brought forth, what one hath gotten greater love, commendation, and honour, than the book wherein he carefully owns his over-sights and sincerely con-demneth them. Hooker's Pref.

His son mark'd this over-sight,
And then mistook reverse of wrong for right.
To OVERSIZ. v. a. [over and size.]

1. To surpass in bulk.

Those bred in a mountainous country, over-size those that dwell on low levels. Sandys Journey.

2. [over and size, a compost with which masons cover walls.]
To plaster over.

He thus o'er-size'd with coagulate gore,
Old grandfire Priam seeks. Shaksp. Hamlet.

To OVERSKEW. v. a. [over and skew.]
1. To pass by leaping.

Prefume not ye that are sheep, to make yourselves guides of them that should guide you; neither seek ye to over-skip the fold, which they about you have pitched. Hooker.

2. To pass over.

Mark if to get them the o'er-skip the rest,
Mark if the read them twice, or kiss the name. Donne.

3. To escape.

When that hour o'er-skips me in the days,
Wherein I sigh not, Julia, for thy sake;
The next ensuing hour some soul mischance Torment me. Shaksp. Two Gent. of Verona.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i' th' mind;
But then the mind much sufferance does o'er-skip. Shaksp.

When grief hath mates and bearing fellowship. Shaksp.

To OVERSLEEP. v. a. [over and sleep.] To sleep too long.

To OVERSLIP. v. a. [over and slip.] To pass undons, unnoticed, or unnoted; to neglect.

The carelessness of the justices in imposing this rate, or the negligence of the constables in collecting it, or the backwardness of the inhabitants in paying the same, over-slipped the time. Carriv's Survey of Cornwall.

It were injurious to over-slip a noble act in the duke during this employment, which I must celebrate above all his experiences. Watson.

To OVERSNOW. v. a. [over and snow.] To cover with snow.

These I wielded while my bloom was warm,
Ere age unfriending my nerves, or time o'er-snow'd my head.
Dryden's Lucr.

OVERSOLD. part. [from oversell.] Sold at too high a price.

Life with ease I can disclaim,
And think it over-sold to purchase fame. Dryden.

OVERSOWN. adv. [over and sown.] Too soon.

The lad may prove well enough, if he over-sown think not too well of himself, and will bear away that he hearth of his elders. Sidney, b. ii.

OVE

OVERSPENT. part. [over and spend.] Worn; harraffed; forespent. The verb overspend is not used.

Theftylis, wild thyme, and garlick beats.
For harvest-hinds, o'er-spent with toil and heats. Dryden.

To OVERSPREAD. v. a. [over and spread.] To cover over;
to fill; to scatter over.

Whether they were Spaniards, Gauls, Africans, Gothes, or some other which did overspread all christendom, it is impossible to affirm. Spenser.

Of the three fons of Noah was the whole earth overspread.
Gen. ix. 19.

Darkness Europe's face did overspread,
From lazy cells, where superstition bred. Denham.

Not a deluge that only over-run some particular region; but that overspread the face of the whole earth from pole to pole, and from east to west. Burnet.

To OVERSTAND. v. a. [over and stand.] To stand too much upon conditions.

Her's they shall be, since you refuse the price;
What madman would o'erstand his market twice. Dryd.

To OVERSTARE. v. a. [over and stare.] To stare wildly.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly bulkin, or an overstaring frowned head. Afham.

To OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.] To fill too full; to crowd.

If rallery had entered the old Roman coins, we should have been overstocked with medals of this nature. Addison.

Some bishops, not overstocked with relations, or attached to favourites, bestows some inconsiderable benefice. Swift.

Since we are so bent upon enlarging our flocks, it may be worth enquiring what we shall do with our wool, in case Barnstable should be overstocked. Swift.

To OVERSTOCK. v. a. [over and stock.] To store with too much.

Fishes are more numerous than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn; and if all these should come to maturity, even the ocean itself would have been long since overstocked with fish. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. n. [over and strain.] To make too violent efforts.

Cassius lost himself, his equipage, and his army, by over- straining for the Parthian gold. Callier.

He wished all painters would imprint this lesson deeply in their memory, that with overstraining and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To OVERSTRAIN. v. a. To stretch too far.

Confessors were apt to overstrain their privileges, in which
St. Cyprian made a notable stand against them. Ayliffe.

To OVERSWAY. v. a. [over and sway.] To over-rule; to bear down.

When they are the major part of a general assembly, then their voices being more in number, must over-sway their judgments who are fewer. Hooker.

Great command o'er-sways our order. Shaksp.

To OVERSWAY. v. a. [over and swell.] To rise above.

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'er-swells the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. Shaksp.

When his banks the prince of rivers, Po,
Doth over-swells, he breaks with hideous fall. Fairfax.

OVERT. adj. [overt, Fr.] Open; public; apparent.

To vouch this, is no proof,
Without more certain and more overt test,
Than these thin habits and poor likelihoods. Shaksp.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise; but there be secret and hidden virtues that bring forth fortune; certain deliveries of a man's self. Bacon.

My repulse at Hull, was the first overt essay to be made how patiently I could bear the loss of my kingdoms. K. Charles.

The design of their destruction may have been projected in the dark; but when all was ripe, their enemies proceeded to so many overt acts in the face of the nation, that it was obvious to the meanest. Swift.

Whereas human laws can reach no farther than to restrain the overt action, religion extends to the secret motions of the soul. Rogers, Sermon. 17.

OVERTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Openly.

To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.]

1. To catch any thingy pursuit; to come up to something going before.

We durst not continue longer so near her confines, lest her plagues might suddenly overtake us before we did cease to be partakers with her sins. Hooker.

If I had given you this at over-night,
She might have been overtaken; and yet she writes Pursuit would be but vain. Shakespeare.

I shall see
The winged vengeance overtake such children. Shaksp.

The enemy said, I will pursue, I will overtake, I will divide the spoil. Ex. xv. 9.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will out-fly hers, as bullets down before
A later bullet may overtake, the powder being more. Donne.

OVE

To thy wishes move a speedy pace,
Or death will soon overtake thee in the chace. Dryden.
How must he tremble for fear vengeance should overtake him, before he has made his peace with God? Rogers.

2. To take by surprize.
If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual reflexe such an one in the spirit of meekness. Gal. vi. 1.

To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and take.] To burthen with too heavy duties or injunctions.

That office is performed by the parts with difficulty, because they were overtaken. Harvey on Consumptions.

To OVERTAKE. v. a. [over and tax.] To tax too heavily.

To OVERTHROW. v. a. [over and throw; preter. over- threw; part. overthrown.]

1. To turn upside down.

Pittacus was a wife and valiant man, but his wife over- threw the table when he had invited his friends. Taylor.

2. To throw down; to ruin; to demolish.

When the walls of Thebes he overthrew,
His fatal hand my royal father slew. Dryden.

3. To defeat; to conquer; to vanquish.

Our endeavour is not so much to overthrow them with whom we contend, as to yield them just and reasonable causes.
Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

To Sujah next, your conquering army drew,
Him they surpris'd, and easily o'erthrew. Dryden.

4. To destroy; to mischief; to bring to nothing.

She found means to have us accu'd to the king, as though we went about some practice to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney, b. ii.

Here's Glo'ter
O'er-charging your free purges with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Hen. VI.

Thou walkest in peril of thy overthrowing. Ecc. xiii. 13.

God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness. Prov. xxi. 12.

OVERTHROW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The state of being turned upside down.

2. Ruin; destruction.

Of those christian oratories, the overthrow and ruin is defired, not by infidels, pagans, or Turks, but by a special refin'd sect of christian believers. Hooker, b. v. f. 17.

They return again into Florida, to the murder and over- throw of their own countrymen. Abbott.

I serve my mortal foe,
The man who caus'd my country's overthrow. Dryden.

3. Defeat; discomfiture.

From without came to mine eyes the blow,
Whereto mine inward thoughts did faintly yield;
Both these conspir'd poor reason's overthrow;
False in myself, thus have I lost the field. Sidney.

Quiet soul, depart;
For I have seen our enemies overthrow. Shaksp.

From these divers Scots feared more harm by victory than they found among their enemies by their overthrow. Hayw.

Poor Hannibal is maul'd,
The theme is giv'n, and trait the council's call'd,
Whether he should to Rome directly go,
To reap the fruit of the dire overthrow. Dryden.

4. Degradation.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not 'till then he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little. Shaksp.

OVERTHROWER. n. f. [from overthrow.] He who overthrows.

OVERTHWART. adj. [over and thwart.]

1. Opposite; being over against.

We whisper, for fear our overthwart neighbours
Should hear us, and betray us to the government. Dryd.

2. Crossing any thing perpendicularly.

Perverse; adverse; contradictory.

Two or three acts disposed them to cross and oppose any proposition; and that overthwart humour was discovered to rule in the breasts of many. Clarendon.

OVERTHWARTLY. adv. [from overthwart.]

1. Across; transversely.

The brawn of the thigh shall appear, by drawing small hair strokes from the hip to the knee, shadowed again over- thwartly. Peacham on Drawing.

2. Pervicaciously; perversely.

OVERTHWARTNESS. n. f. [from overthwart.] Pervicacity; perverseness.

OVERTOOK. pret. and part. pass. of overtake.

To OVERTOO. v. a. [over and top.]

1. To rise above; to raise the head above.

Pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
T' o'er-top old Pelion or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shaksp. Hamlet.

In the dance the graceful goddess leads,
The quire of nymphs, and overtops their heads. Dryd.

2. To excel; to surpass.

Who ever yet
Have flood to charity, and display'd th' effects 18 X Of

OVE

Of disposition gentle and of wisdom,
Shaksp. Hen. VIII.
 As fast as the soul o'ersteps the body, so far its pains, or rather mournful sensations, exceed those of the carcase. Harv.
 3. To obscure; to make of less importance by superiour excellence.
 Whereas he had been heretofore an arbiter of Europe, he should now grow less, and be over-topped by so great a conjunction. Bacon's Henry VII.
 One whom you love,
 Had champion kill'd, or trophy won,
 Rather than thus be overtop'd,
 Would you not wish his laurels cropt?
 To OVERTRIP. v. a. [over and trip.] To trip over; to walk lightly over.
 In such a night,
 Did Thistle fearfully o'ertrip the dew,
 And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
 And ran dismay'd away. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
OVERTURE. n. f. [enverture, French.]
 1. Opening; disclosure; discovery.
 I wish
 You had only in your silent judgment try'd it, Without more overture. Shaksp. Win. Tale.
 2. Proposal; something offered to consideration.
 Mac Murugh moved Henry to invade Ireland, and made an overture unto him for obtaining of the sovereign lordship thereof. Davies on Ireland.
 All these fair overtures, made by men well esteem'd for honest dealings, could not take place. Hayward.
 We with open breast Stand ready to receive them, if they like
 Our overtures, and turn not back perverse. Milton.
 The earl of Pembroke, who abhorred the war, promoted all overtures towards accommodation with great importunity. Clarendon.
 If a convenient supply offers itself to be seized by force or gained by fraud, human nature persuades us to hearken to the inviting overtures. Rogers, Sermon 2.
 Suppose five hundred men proposing, debating, and voting, according to their own little or much reason, abundance of indigested and abortive, many pernicious and foolish overtures would arise. Swift.
 To OVERTURN. v. a. [over and turn.]
 1. To throw down; to topple down; to subvert; to ruin.
 He is wise in heart and mighty in strength—which removeth
 the mountains, and overturneth them in his anger. Job ix. 5.
 These will sometimes overturn, and sometimes swallow up towns, and make a general confusion in nature. Burnet.
 This he obviates, by saying we see all the ideas in God; which is an answer to this objection, but such an one as overturns his whole hypothesis, and renders it useless and as unintelligible, as any of those he has laid aside. Locke.
 If we will not encourage publick works of beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build; there is no room left for charity. Atterbury.
 A monument of deathless fame,
 A woman's hand overturns. Rowe.
 2. To over-power; to conquer.
 Pain excessive overturns all patience. Milton.
OVERTURNER. n. f. [from overturn.] Subverter.
 I have brought before you a robber of the publick treasure, an overturner of law and justice, and the destruction of the Sicilian province. Swift.
 To OVERVALUE. v. a. [over and value.] To rate at too high a price.
 We have just cause to stand in some fear, least by thus overvaluing their sermons they make the price and estimation of scripture, otherwise notified, to fall. Hosker.
 To OVERVEIL. v. a. [over and veil.] To cover;
 The day begins to break, and night is fled;
 Whose pitchy mantle overveil'd the earth. Shaksp.
 To OVERVOTE. v. a. [over and vote.] To conquer by plurality of votes.
 The lords and commons might be content to be overvoted by the major part of both houses, when they had used each their own freedom. King Charles.
 To OVERWATCH. v. n. [over and watch.] To subdue with long want of rest.
 Morpheus is dispatch'd;
 Which done, the lazy monarch overwatch'd,
 Down from his propping elbow drops his head,
 Dissolv'd in sleep, and shrinks within his bed. Dryden.
OVERWATCHED. adj. Tired with too much watching.
 While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn himself to pacify with sleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney.
OVERWEAK. adj. [over and weak.] Too weak; too feeble.
 Paternal persuasions, after mankind began to forget the original giver of life, became in all overweak to resist the first inclination of evil; or after, when it became habitual, to constrain it. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

OVE

 To OVERWEARY. adj. [over and weary.] To subdue with fatigue.
 Might not Palinurus fall asleep and drop into the sea, having been over-wearied with watching. Dryden.
 To OVERWEATHER. v. a. [over and weather.] To batter
 by violence of weather.
 How like a younker or a prodigal,
 The skared bark puts from her native bay,
 Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
 How like the prodigal doth the return,
 With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
 Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind. Shaksp.
 To OVERWHEEN. v. n. [over and ween.] To think too highly;
 to think with arrogance.
 To reach beyond the truth of any thing in thought;
 especially in the opinion of a man's self. Hammer.
 Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur,
 Run back and bite, because he was with-held. Shaksp.
 My master hath sent for me, to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so. Shaksp.
 Left hence these o'erweening rags of France,
 These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives. Shaksp.
 My eye's too quick, my heart o'erween too much.
 Unless my hand and strength could equal them. Shaksp.
 Take heed of o'erweening, and compare
 Thy peacock's feet with thy gay peacock's train;
 Study the best and highest things that are,
 But of thyself an humble thought retain. Davies.
 They that o'erween,
 And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
 No anger find in thee. Milton.
 He might have learnt
 Less o'erweening, since he fail'd in Job,
 Whose constant perseverance overcame
 Whate'er his cruel malice could invent. Par. Reg.
 No man is so bold, rash, and o'erweening of his own works, as an ill painter and a bad poet. Dryden.
 Enthusiasm, though founded neither on reason nor revelation, but rising from the conceits of a warmed or o'er- weening brain, works more powerfully on the persuasions and actions of men, than either or both together. Locke.
 Men of fair minds and not given up to the o'erweening of self-flattery, are frequently guilty of it: and, in many cases, one with amazement hears the arguings, and is astonish'd at the obstinacy of a worthy man who yields not to the evidence of reason. Locke.
 Now enters o'erweening pride,
 And scandal ever gaping wide. Swift.
OVERWEENINGLY. adv. [from o'erween.] With too much arrogance; with too high an opinion.
 To OVERWEIGH. v. a. [over and weigh.] To preponderate.
 Sharp and subtle discourses of wit, procure many times very great applause, but being laid in the balance with that which the habit of sound experience delivereth, they are over- weighed. Hosker, b. v. f. 7.
 My unfoild name, the austerities of my life,
 Will so your accusation overweigh,
 That you shall stifle in your own report. Shaksp.
OVERWEIGHT. n. f. [over and weight.] Preponderance.
 Sinking into water is but an overweight of the body, in respect of the water. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 To OVERWHELM. v. a. [over and subelm.]
 1. To crush underneath something violent and weighty.
 What age is this, where honest men,
 Plac'd at the helm,
 A sea of some foul mouth or pen,
 Shall overwhelm? Ben. Johnson.
 Back do I toss these treasons to thy head,
 With the hell hatred lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shaksp.
 How trifling an apprehension is the flame of being laughed at by fools, when compared with that everlasting flame and astonishment which shall overwhelm the sinner, when he shall appear before the tribunal of Christ. Rogers.
 Blind they rejoice, though now even now they fall;
 Death hastes amain; one hour o'erwhelms them all. Pope.
 2. To overlook gloomily.
 Let the brow o'erwhelm it,
 As fearfully as doth a galled rock
 O'erhang and jutty his confounded base. Shaksp.
 An apothecary late I noted,
 In tatter'd weeds with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shaksp. Rom. and Juliet.
OVERWHELMINGLY. adv. [from overwhelming.] In such a manner as to overwhelm.
 Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin, nor impudently betray their souls to ruin for that which they call light and trivial; which is so indeed in respect

OUN

respect of the acquiescence, but overwhelmingly ponderous in regard of the pernicious consequences. Decay of Piety.
OVERWISE. v. a. [over and wise.] Wife to affection.
 Make not thyself overwise. Ecd. vii. 16.
OVERWROUGHT. part. [over and wrought.]
 1. Labour'd too much.
 Apelles said of Protogenes, that he knew not when to give over. A work may be overwrought, as well as underwrought: too much labour often takes away the spirit, by adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 2. Worked all over.
 Of Gothic structure was the northern side,
Overwrought with ornaments of barbarous pride. Pope.
 3. It has in Shakespeare a sense which I know not well how to reconcile to the original meaning of the word, and therefore conclude it misprinted for overwrought; that is, overreached or cheated.
 By some device or other,
 The villain is o'erwrought of all my money:
 They say this town is full of cozenage. Shaksp.
OVERWORN. part. [over and worn.]
 1. Worn out; subdued by toil.
 With watching overworn, with cares oppress'd, Unhappy I had laid me down to rest. Dryden.
 2. Spoiled by time.
 The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
 Are mighty goddesses in this monarchy. Shaksp.
OVERYEARED. adj. [over and year.] Too old.
 Among them dwelt
 A maid, whose fruit was ripe, not overyeared. Fairfax.
OVERZEALOUS. adj. [over and zealous.] Too zealous.
 It is not of such weighty necessity to determine one way or the other, as some overzealous for or against the immortality of the soul, have been forward to make the whole believe. Locke.
OUGHT. n. f. [aphrit, that is, a whit, Saxon. This word is therefore more properly written ought. See AUGHT.] Any thing; not nothing.
 For ought that I can understand, there is no part but the bare English pale, in which the Irish have not the greatest footing. Spenser on Ireland.
 He asked him if he saw ought. Mark viii. 23.
 To do ought good never will be our task;
 But ever to do ill our sole delight. Milton's Par. Lost.
 Universal Lord! be bounteous still
 To give us only good; and if the night
 Have gather'd ought of evil, or conceal'd, Disperse it, as now light dispels the dark. Milton.
OUGHT. verb. imperf. [This word the etymologists make the preterite of owe, but it has often a present signification.]
 1. [Preterite of owe.] Owed; was bound to pay; have been indebted.
 Apprehending the occasion, I will add a continuance to that happy motion, and besides give you some tribute of the love and duty I long have ought you. Spelman.
 This blood which men by treason fought,
 That followed, fir, which to myself I ought. Dryden.
 2. To be obliged by duty.
 Judges ought to remember, that their office is to interpret law, and not to make or give law. Bacon.
 Morals critics ought to show. Pope.
 She acts just as she ought.
 But never, never reach'd one generous thought. Pope.
 3. To be fit; to be necessary.
 If grammar ought to be taught, it must be to one that can speak the language already. Locke.
OVIFORM. adj. [ovum and forma, Lat.] Having the shape of an egg.
 This notion of the mundane egg, or that the world was ovi- form, hath been the sense and language of all antiquity. Barn.
OVIPOAROUS. adj. [ovum and pario, Latin.] Bringing forth eggs; not viviparous.
 That fishes and birds should be oviparous, is a plain sign of providence. More's Ant. against Atheism.
 Birds and oviparous creatures have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them for many years laying. Ray.
OUNCE. n. f. [unce, Fr. uncia, Latin.] A name of weight of different value in different denominations of weight. In troy weight, an ounce is twenty penny-weight; in a penny-weight, twenty-four grains.
 The blood he hath lost,
 Which I dare vouch is more than that he hath
 By many an ounce, he dropt it for his country. Shaksp.
 A sponge dry weigheth one ounce twenty-six grains; the same sponge being wet, weigheth fourteen ounces six drams and three quarters. Bacon.
OUNCE. n. f. [unce, French; unza, Spanish.] A lynx; a panther.

OUT

The ounce,
 The libbard, and the tiger, as the mole
 Rising, the crumbled earth above them threw In hillocks. Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.
OUTER. n. f. [ouff, Teutonic.] A fairy; a goblin.
 Nan Page and my little son, we'll dress
 Like urchins, outers, and fairies, green and white. Shak.
OUTPHEN. n. f. [from ouph.] Elfish.
 Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
 Ye moon shine revellers and shades of night,
 You ouphen heirs of fixed destiny,
 Attend your office. Shakespeare.
OUR. pron. poss. [uue, Saxon.]
 1. Pertaining to us; belonging to us:
 You shall Lead our first battle, brave Macduff, and we Shall take upon us what else remains. Shakespeare.
 Our wit is given almighty God to know,
 Our will is given to love him being known;
 But God could not be known to us below,
 But by his works which through the sense are shown.
 So in our little world this foul of ours
 Being only one, and to one body ty'd,
 Doth use on divers objects divers powers,
 And so are her effects diversify'd. Davies.
 2. When the substantive goes before, it is written ours.
 Edmund, whose virtue in this instance,
 So much commands itself, you shall be ours. Shaksp.
 Thou that hast fashion'd twice this foul of ours,
 So that she is by double title thine, Davies.
 Be ours, who e'er thou art,
 Forget the Greeks. Denham.
 Taxallan, thook by Montezuma's powers,
 Has, to resist his forces, call'd in ours. Dryden.
 Reading furnishes the mind only with materials of knowledge, it is thinking makes what we read ours: it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections, unless we chew them over again, they will not give us strength. Locke.
 Their organs are better dispos'd than ours, for receiving grateful impressions from sensible objects. Atterbury.
OURSELVES. reciprocal pronoun. [the plural of myself.]
 1. We; not others.
 We ourselves might distinctly number in words a great deal farther than we usually do, would we find out but some fit denominations to signify them by. Locke.
 2. Us; not others, in the oblique cases.
 Safe in ourselves, while on ourselves we stand,
 The sea is ours, and that defends the land. Dryden.
OURSELF is used in the regal style.
 To make society
 The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
 Till supper-time alone. Shaksp. Macbeth.
 We ourself will follow
 In the main battle. Shakespeare.
 Not so much as a treaty can be obtained, unless we would denude ourself of all force to defend us. Clarendon.
OUSE. n. f. Tanners bark. Ainsworth.
OUSEL. n. f. [oupe, Saxon.] A blackbird.
 The merry lark her mattins sings aloft,
 The thrush replies, the mavis defiant plays,
 The ousel shrills, the ruddock warbles soft;
 So goodly all agree, with sweet consent,

TO OUTDO. v. a. [out and do.] To excel; to surpass; to perform beyond another.
 He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly. Shak.
 What brave commander is not proud to see Thy brave Melantius in his gallantry?
 Our greatest ladies love to see their scorn
 Outdone by thine, in what themselves have worn. Waller.
 Heav'nly love shall outdo hellish hate,
 Giving to death, and dying to redeem,
 So dearly to redeem what hellish hate
 So easily destroy'd. Milton.
 Here let these who boast in mortal things,
 Learn how their greatest monuments of fame,
 And strength, and art, are easily outdone
 By spirits reprobate. Milton.
 An impostor outdoes the original.
 Now all the gods reward and bless my son;
 Thou hast this day thy father's youth outdone. Dryden.
 I must confess the encounter of that day
 Warm'd me indeed, but quite another way;
 Not with the fire of youth, but generous rage,
 To see the glories of my youthful age
 So far outdone. Dryden.
 The boy's mother despised for not having read a system
 Of logic, outdoes him in it. Locke.
 I grieve to be outdone by Gay,
 In my own humorous biting way. Swift.

 Yourself transplant
 A while from hence: perchance outlandish ground
 Bears no more wit than ours; but yet more scant Are those diversions there which here abound. Dante.
 Tedious waste of time to fit and hear
 So many hollow compliments and lies, Outlandish flatteries. Milt. Par. Reg. b. iv.
 Upon the approach of the king's troops under General Wills, who was used to the outlandish way of making war, we put in practice passive obedience. Addison.
TO OUTLAST. v. a. [out and last.] To surpass in duration.
 Good housewives, to make their candles burn the longer, lay them in bran, which makes them harder; inasmuch as they will out-last other candles of the same stuff, half in half. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N. 371.
 Summer's chief honour, if thou hadst outlasted, Bleak winter's force that made thy blossoms dry. Milt.
 The present age hath attempted perpetual motions, whose revolutions might outlast the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself. Brown's V. Err.
 What may be hop'd,
 When not from Helicon's imagin'd spring,
 But sacred writ, we borrow what we sing?
 This with the fabrick of the world begun,
 Elder than light, and shall outlast the sun. Waller.
OUTLAW. n. f. [utlaga, Saxon.] One excluded from the benefit of the law. A blunderer; a robber; a bandit.
 An outlaw in a castle keeps. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
 Gathering unto him all the scatterlings and outlaws out of the woods and mountains, he marched forth into the English pale. Spenser on Ireland.
 As long as they were out of the protection of the law; so as every Englishman might kill them, how should they be other than outlaws and enemies to the crown of England? Deviere on Ireland.
 You may as well spread out the unfur'd heaps Of misers treasure by an outlaw's den, And

 Yet then there is hopes a great man's memory
 May outlive his life half a year. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
 He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
 Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd. Shakespeare.
 His courage was so signal that day, that too much could not be expected from it, if he had outlived it. Clarend.
 Thou must outlive
 Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
 To wither'd, weak, and gray. Milt. Par. Lost.
 Time, which made them their fame outlive,
 To Cowley scarce did ripeness give. Denham.
 The soldier grows less apprehensive, by computing upon the disproportion of those that outlive a battle, to those that fall in it. L'Estrange.
 Since we have lost
 Freedom, wealth, honour, which we value most,
 I wish they would our lives a period give;
 They live too long who happiness outlive. Dryden.
 It is of great consequence where noble families are gone to decay; because their titles outlive their estates. Swift.
 Pray outlive me, and then die as soon as you please. Swift.
OUTLIVER. n. f. [out and live.] A survivor.
TO OUTLOOK. v. a. [out and look.] To face down; to browbeat.

1. Externally; opposed to inwardly.
That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify.
Hooker, b. v. f. 6.
Grieved with disgrace, remaining in their fears:
However seeming outwardly content,
Yet th' inward touch their wounded honour bears. Daniel.
2. In appearance not sincerely.
Many wicked men are often touched with some inward reverence for that goodness which they cannot be persuaded to practise; nay, which they outwardly seem to despise. Sprat.
OUTWARDS. adv. Towards the out-parts.
Do not black bodies conceive heat more easily from light than those of other colours do, by reason that the light falling on them is not reflected outwards, but enters the bodies, and is often reflected and refracted within them until it be stifled and lost?
Newton's Opticks.
TO OUTWEAR. v. a. [out and wear.] To pass tediously.
By the stream, if I the night out-wear,
Thus spent already how shall nature bear
The dews descending and nocturnal air.
Pope.
TO OUTWEED. v. a. [out and weed.] To extirpate as a weed.
Wrath is a fire, and jealousy a weed;
The sparks soon quench, the springing weed out-weed,
Spens.
TO OUTWEIGH. v. a. [out and weigh.]
1. To exceed in gravity.
These instruments require so much strength for the supporting of the weight to be moved, as may be equal unto it, besides that other super-added power whereby it is out-weighed and moved.
Wilkins's Math. Mag.
2. To preponderate; to excel in value or influence.
If any think brave death out-weighs bad life,
Let him express his disposition.
Shaksp. Coriolanus.
All your care is for your prince I see.
Your truth to him out-weighs your love to me. Dryden.
Whenever he finds the hardship of his slavery out-weighs the value of his life, it is in his power, by resisting the will of his master, to draw on himself the death he desires. Locke.
The marriage of the clergy is attended with the poverty of some of them, which is balanced and out-weighed by many single advantages.
Atterbury.
TO OUTWELL. v. a. [out and well.] To pour out.
As when old father Nilus 'gins to swell,
With timely pride about the Egyptian vale,
His fatie waves do fertile silt out-well,
And overflow each plain and lowly dale.
Fa. Queen.
TO OUTWIT. v. a. [out and wit.] To cheat; to overcome by stratagem.
A fox may be out-witted, and a hare out-stript. L'Estr.
The truer hearted any man is, the more liable he is to be imposed on; and then the world calls it out-witting a man, when he is only out-knave.
L'Estrange.
Nothing is more equal in justice, and indeed more natural in the direct consequence of effects and causes, than for men wickedly wise to out-wit themselves; and for such as wrestle with providence, to trip up their own heels. South.
After the death of Crassus, Pompey found himself out-witted by Caesar and broke with him.
Dryden.
OUTWORK. n. f. [out and work.] The parts of a fortification next the enemy.
Take care of our out-work, the navy royal, which are the walls of the kingdom; and every great ship is an impregnable fort; and our many safe and commodious ports are the redoubts to secure them.
Bacon.
Death hath taken in the out-works,
And now assails the fort; I feel, I feel him
Gnawing my heart-strings.
Denham.
OUTWORN. part. [from out-wear.] Consumed or destroyed by use.
Better at home lie bed-ridden, idle,
Inglorious, unemployed, with age out-worn.
Milton.

OWN

To OUTWRE'ST. v. a. [out and wrest.] To extort by violence.

The growing anguish
Rankled so fore and fester'd inwardly,
Till that the truth thereof I did out-wrest. Fa. Queen.
OUTWROUGHT. part. [out and wrought.] Out-done; exceeded in efficacy.

In your violent acts,
The fall of torrents and the noise of tempests,
The boiling of Carylids, the sea's wildness,
The eating force of flames, and wings of winds,
Be all out-wrought by your transcendent furies. B. Johnf.

To OUTWORTH. v. a. [out and worth.] To excel in value.
A beggar's book

Out-worth a noble's blood. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.
To OWE. v. a. [eg aa, I owe, or I ought, Islandick.]

1. To be obliged to pay; to be indebted.

I owe you much, and, like a wife's youth,
That which I owe is lost. Shakefp. Merch. of Ven.

Let none seek needless causes to approve
The faith they owe. Milt. Par. Lest, b. ix.

All your parts of pious duty done,
You owe your Ormond nothing but a son. Dryden.

But 'tis thy fate to give, and mine to owe. Dryden.
If, upon the general balance of trade, English merchants owe to foreigners one hundred thousand pounds, if commodities do not, our money must go out to pay it. Locke.

2. To be obliged to ascribe; to be obliged for.
By me upheld, that he may know how frail
His fall'n condition is, and to me owe. Milton.

3. To have from any thing as the consequence of a cause.
O deem thy fall not ow'd to man's decree,
Jove hated Greece, and punish'd Greece in thee. Pope.

4. To possess; to be the right owner of. For owe, which is, in this sense, obsolete, we now use own.

Thou dost here usurp
The name thou ow'st not, and hast put thyself Upon this island as a spy. Shakefp. Tempest.

Fate, flew thy force; ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be; and be this so. Shakefp.

Not poppy nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'd'st yesterday. Shakefp. Othello.

If any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry;
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crofton.

5. A practice has long prevailed among writers, to use owing, the active participle of owe, in a passive sense, for owed or due. Of this impropriety Bolnbrooke was aware, and, having no quick sense of the force of English words, has used due, in the sense of consequence or imputation, which by other writers is only used of debt. We say, the money is due to me; Bolnbrooke says, the effect is due to the cause.

6. Consequential.
This was owing to an indifference to the pleasures of life, and an aversion to the pomps of it. Atterbury.

7. Due as a debt.
You are both too bold;
I'll teach you all what's owing to your queen. Dryden.

The debt, owing from one country to the other, cannot be paid without real effects sent thither to that value. Locke.

8. Imputable to, as an agent.
If we estimate things, what in them is owing to nature, and what to labour, we shall find in most of them  $\frac{2}{3}$  to be on the account of labour. Locke.

The custom of particular impeachments was not limited any more than that of fruggles between nobles and commons, the ruin of Greece was owing to the former, as that of Rome was to the latter. Swift.

OWL. n. f. [ule, Saxon; bulate, French and Scottish.] A
OWLET. n. f. bird that flies about in the night and catches mice.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,
Lizard's leg, and owl's wing
For a charm. Shakefp. Macbeth.

Return to her!
No! rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To be a comrade with the wolf and owl. Shakefp.

'Twas when the dog-star's unpropitious ray Smote ev'ry brain, and wither'd every bay;
Sick was the sun, the owl forlook his bow'r. Dunciad.

OWLER. n. f. One who carries contraband goods. Perhaps from the necessity of carrying on an illicit trade by night.

By running goods, these graceless owlers gain. Swift.
We understand by some owlers, old people die in France.

OWN. n. f. [agen, Saxon; eyzen, Dutch.]

1. This is a word of no other use than as it is added to the possessive pronouns, my, thy, his, our, your, their. It seems to be a substantive; as, my oxen, my peculiar: but is, in reality, the participle passive of the verb owe, in the participle own or own: my oxen; the thing owned by, or belonging to me.

OX

Inachus in his cave alone,
Wept not another's losses, but his own. Dryden.

2. It is added generally by way of emphasis or corroboration.
I yet never was forsworn,
Scarcely have coveted what was my own. Shakefp.

Every nation made gods of their own, and put them in high places. 2 Kings xvii. 29.

For my own share one beauty I design,
Engage your honours that the shall be mine. Dryden.

It is conceit rather than understanding, if it must be under the restraint of receiving and holding opinions by the authority of any thing but their own perceived evidence. Locke.

Will the thy linen wash, or hosen darn,
And knit these gloves made of her own spun yarn. Gay.

Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own. Pope.

3. Sometimes it is added to note opposition or contradiction;
domestic; not foreign; mine, his, or yours; not another's.
These tools abroad, these turnouts with his own,
Fell in the revolution of one year. Daniel.

There's nothing filtier than a crafty knave out-witted, and beaten at his own play. L'Estrange.

To OWN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To acknowledge; to avow for one's own.
When you come, find me out,
And own me for your son. Dryden's Cleomenes.

2. To possess; to claim; to hold by right.
Tell me, ye Trojans, for that name you own;
Nor is your course upon our coasts unknown. Dryden.

Others on earth o'er human race prelude,
Of these the chief, the care of nations own,
And guard with arms divine the British throne. Pope.

3. To avow.
I'll venture out alone,
Since you, fair prince, my protection own. Dryden.

4. To confess; to not to deny.
Make this truth so evident, that those who are unwilling to own it may yet be ashamed to deny it. Tillotson.

Others will own their weakness of understanding. Locke.
OWNERSHIP. n. f. [from owner.] Property; rightful possession.

In a real action, the proximate cause is the property or ownership of the thing in controversy. Ayliffe's Par.

OWNER. n. f. [from own.] One to whom any thing belongs; master; rightful possessor.

A bark
Stays but till her owner comes aboard. Shakefp.

Is it not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in sight of me the owner,
But thou wilt brave me. Shakefp.

Here shew favour, because it happeneth that the owner hath incurred the forfeiture of eight years profit of his lands, before he cometh to the knowledge of the process against him. Bacon.

They intend advantage of my labours,
With no small profit daily to my owners. Milton.

These wait the owners last despair,
And what's permitted to the flames invade. Dryden.

A freehold, though but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.
Addison's Freeholder, N<sup>o</sup>. 1.

That small muscle draws the nose upwards, when it expresses the contempt which the owner of it has upon seeing any thing he does not like. Addison's Spectator.

Victory hath not made us insolent, nor have we taken advantage to gain any thing beyond the honour of restoring every one's right to their just owners. Atterbury.

What is this wit, which must our cares employ?
The owner's wife, that other men enjoy. Pope.

OWRE. n. f. [orus julatus, Lat.] A beast. Ainsworth.
OX. n. f. plur. OXEN. [oxa, Saxon; oxe, Danish.]

1. The general name for black cattle.
The black ox hath not trod on his foot. Camden.

Sheep run not half so tim'rous from the wolf,
Or horse or oxen from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves. Shakefp.

I saw the river Clitumnus, celebrated by the poets for making cattle white that drink of it. The inhabitants of that country have still the same opinion, and have a great many oxen of a whitish colour to confirm them in it. Addi.

2. A castrated bull.
The horns of oxen and cows are larger than the bulls;
which is caused by abundance of moisture.

Although there be naturally more males than females, yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Grant.

The field is spacious I design to fow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough. Dryden.

The

OYE

The frowning bull
And ox half-raised.

OXBAKE. n. f. A plant. Thomson's Summer.
OXEYE. n. f. [Buphrastus.] The whole face of the plant is like tanfy; the flowers are radiated, and the most part produced simply; the flowers of the disk are separated with an imbricated little leaf. Miller.

OXGANG of Land. n. f. Twenty acres. Ainsworth.
OXHEAL. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

both in England and Scotland. It is thrice repeated.

OZO

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality.

Crier hobgoblin make the fairy Oyes. Shakefp.
Oyes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry;
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag. Crofton.

OYLETHOLE. n. f. See OYLET. [It may be written oylet, from oillet; French; but oylet seems better.]

Distinguish'd flashes deck the great;
As each excels in birth or state;
His oylethole are more and ampler,
The king's own body was a famplar. Prior.

OYSTER. n. f. [oyster, Dutch; huitre, Fr.] A bivalve testa-ceous fish.

I will not lend thee a penny—
—Why then the world's mine oyster which I with sword will open. Shakefp. Merr. W. of Wind.

Rich honesty dwells like your miser, fir, in a poor house;
as your pearl in your foul oyster. Shakefp.

Another maff held a kind of oyster shell, and other bivalves.
Woodward on Fossils.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we are superior to all the ranks of being in this visible world; though we descend below the oyster to the least animated atoms discovered by microscopes.

Watts's Improv. of the Mind.
Where oyster tubs in rows
Are rang'd beside the posts, there stay thy haste. Gay.

the inside of the nostrils that gives an ill stench. Quincy.

P.

PAC

P Is a labial consonant, formed by a slight compression of the anterior part of the lips; as, pull, pelt. It is confounded by the Germans and Welsh with b: it has an uniform sound: it is sometimes mute before t; as, account, receipt; but the mute p is in modern orthography commonly omitted.

PABULAR. adj. [pabulum, Lat.] Affording aliment or provender.

PABULATION. n. f. [pabulum, Lat.] The act of feeding or procuring provender.

PABULOUS. adj. [pabulum, Lat.] Alimential; affording aliment.

We doubt the air is the pabulous supply of fire, much less that flame is properly air kindled. Brown's Vulgar Err.

PACE. n. f. [pas, French.]

1. Step; single movement in walking. Behind her death, Close following pace for pace, not mounted yet On his pale horse. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
2. Gait; manner of walk. He himself went but a kind of languishing pace, with his eyes sometimes cast up to heaven, as though his fancies strove to mount higher. Sidney. He saw Menelaus come with heavy pace; Wet were his eyes, and cheerless was his face. Addison.
3. Degree of celerity. To keep pace, is not to be left behind. To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death. Shakespeare, Macbeth. Bring me word How the world goes, that to the pace of it I may spur on my journey. Shakespeare, Coriolanus. His teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; that his brothers, under the same training, might hold pace with him. Wotton's Buckingham. The beggar sings ev'n when he sees the place, Befet with thieves, and never mends his pace. Dryden. Just as much He mended pace upon the touch. Hudibras, p. i. 5. A measure of five feet. The quantity supposed to be measured by the foot from the place where it is taken up to that where it is set down. Measuring land by walking over it, they styled a double step; i. e. the space from the elevation of one foot, to the same foot set down again, mediated by a step of the other foot; a pace equal to five foot; a thousand of which paces made a mile. Holder on Time. The violence of tempests never moves the sea above six paces deep. Wilkin's Math. Magic.
6. A particular movement which horses are taught, though some have it naturally, made by lifting the legs on the same side together. They rode, but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot; That's to say, whether tollutation, As they do term it, or succussion. Hudibras.

TO PACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To move on slowly. He soft arrived on the grassy plain, And fairly paced forth with easy pain. Hubbard. As we pac'd along Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought, that Glosster dumbl'd. Shakespeare, R. III. I beheld Crispinus, both in birth and manners vile,

Pacing in pomp with cloak of Tyrian dye, Chang'd oft a day. Dryden's Juvenal. The moon rose in the clearest sky I ever saw, by whose solemn light I paced on slowly without interruption. Pope. The nymph, obedient to divine command, To seek Ulysses, pac'd along the sand. Pope.

2. To move. Remember well, with speed for pace, To speak of Perdita. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
3. [Used of horses.] To move by raising the legs on the same side together. TO PACE. v. a.
1. To measure by steps. If you can, pace your widow In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your boam on this wretch. Shakespeare.
- PACED. adj. [from pace.] Having a particular gait. Revenge is sure, though sometimes slowly pac'd; Awake, awake, or sleeping sleep thy last. Dryden.
- PACER. n. f. [from pace.] He that paces.
- PACIFICATION. n. f. [pacification, Fr. from pacify.]
1. The act of making peace. He sent forthwith to the French king his chaplain, charging him because he was a churchman, as best sorting with an embassy of pacification. Bacon's Hen. VII. David, by an happy and seasonable pacification, was took off from acting that bloody tragedy. South.
2. The act of appealing or pacifying. A world was to be saved by a pacification of wrath, through the dignity of that sacrifice which should be offered. Hobbes.
- PACIFICATOR. n. f. [pacificator, Fr. from pacify.] Peace-maker. He set and kept on foot a continual treaty of peace; besides he had in consideration the bearing the blessed person of a pacificator. Bacon's Henry VII.
- PACIFICATORY. adj. [from pacificator.] Tending to make peace.
- PACIFIC. adj. [pacifique, Fr. pacifcus, Lat.] Peace-making; mild; gentle; appealing. God now in his gracious pacifick manner comes to treat with them. Hammond's Fundamentals. Returning, in his bill An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.
- PACIFIER. n. f. [from pacify.] One who pacifies.
- TO PACIFY. v. a. [pacifier, Fr. pacifis, Lat.] To appease; to still resentment; to quiet an angry person; to compole any desire. While the dog hunted in the river, he had withdrawn to pacify with sleep his over-watched eyes. Sidney, b. ii. Menelaus promised Ptolemy money, if he would pacify the king. 2 Mac. iv. 45. The most high is not pacified for sin by the multitude of sacrifices. Although in his journey he heard news of the victory, yet he went on as far as York, to pacify and settle those countries. Bacon's Henry VII.
- O villain! to have wit at will upon all other occasions, and not one diverting syllable now at a pinch to pacify our mistrefs. L'Estrange.
- Nor William's pow'r, nor Mary's charms Could or repel, or pacify his arms. Prior.
- PACK. n. f. [pack, Dutch.]
1. A large bundle of any thing tied up for carriage. Themistocles said to the king of Persia, that speech was like cloth of Arras, opened and put abroad, whereby the imagery appears in figures; whereas in thoughts they lie but as in packs. Had fly Ulysses at the sack Of Troy, brought thee his pedlar's pack. Cleveland. Our knight did bear no less a pack Of his own buttocks on his back. Hudibras, p. i. 2. A burden;

PAC

2. A burden; a load. I rather chose To cross my friend in his intended drift, Than, by concealing it, heap on your head A pack of sorrows. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven. But when they took notice how stupid a beast it was, they loaded it with packs and burdens, and set boys upon the back of it. L'Estrange.
3. A due number of cards. Women to cards may be compar'd, we play A round or two, when us'd we throw away, Take a fresh pack. Granville. It is wonderful to see persons of sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards. Addison.
4. A number of hounds hunting together. Two ghosts join their packs to hunt her o'er the plain. Dryden. The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent, And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden. The savage soul of game is up at once, The pack full-opening various. Thomson's Summer.
5. A number of people confederated in any bad design or practice. You panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy, against me. Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Wind. Never such a pack of knaves and villains, as they who now governed in the parliament. Clarendon. Bickerstaff is more a man of honour, than to be an accomplice with a pack of rascals that walk the streets on nights. Swift.
6. Any great number, as to quantity and pressure: as a pack or world of troubles. TO PACK. v. a. [packen, Dutch.]
1. To bind up for carriage. A poor merchant driven on unknown land, That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure In one dear casket, and sav'd only that, Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack, Each faddled with his burden on his back. Dryden. What we looked upon as brains, were an heap of strange materials, packed up with wonderful art in the skull. Addison.
2. To send in a hurry. He cannot live, I hope, and must not die, Till George be pack'd with post horse up to heav'n. Shakespeare.
3. To fort the cards so as that the game shall be iniquitously secured. It is applied to any iniquitous procurement of collusion. Enos has Pack cards with Caesar, and false play'd. Shakespeare. There be that can pack cards and yet cannot play well; so there are some that are good in canvasses and factions, that are otherwise weak men. Bacon's Essays, No. 23. The judge shall jobb, the bishop bite the town, And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.
4. To unite picked persons in some bad design. When they have pack'd a parliament, Will once more try th' expedient: Who can already muster friends, To serve for members to our ends. Hudibras. Brutes, called men, in full cry pack'd by the court or country, run down in the house of commons, a deserted horned beast of the court. Wycherly. So many greater fools than they, Will pack a crowded audience the third day. Southem. The expected council was dwindling into a conventicle; a pack'd assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers from all quarters. Atterbury.
